Symposium celebrates women's history

By KELLY WILKERSON
guest writer

With March being designated as Women's History Month in the United States since 1987, Austin Peay began its two-day symposium held in honor of women and the month dedicated to them.

Many notable speakers in both Tennessee history and women's history were present at the conference with the theme "Celebrating Tennessee Women—The First Two Hundred Years." APSU professor of history Betty Jo Wallace opened the meeting with a discussion of why we should celebrate women's history.

Wallace, described as a stimulating and thought-provoking speaker, touched on the problems concerning the lack of representation of women in history and what should be done to bring women to a level equal to men in the study of history.

"We study women because we want a whole picture of the history of humanity," Wallace said.

said. "We have to study women's history because the perceptions of the women from the past shape our self images and our perceptions of other women in the society of 1996."

Wilma Dykeman, a noted Tennessee historian, was the keynote speaker at a luncheon on Friday. Dykeman, from Newport, Tenn., has published 17 books including "The Tall Woman" and "Tennessee Woman—An Infinite Variety."

She began her lecture on Tennessee women by claiming they all had three common characteristics: variety, vitality and vision. She discussed leading women in the history of Tennessee including Wilma Rudolph, Bessie Smith, Rachel Jackson, Sarah Polk and Ida B. Wells.

Dykeman brought life to these individuals with her discussion and left the audience with an improved sense of the importance of women in the history of Tennessee.

"In a very short amount of Academic affairs position narrows to five applicants

By ALICIA MOREHEAD
managing editor

The seven finalists for the position of vice president of academic affairs have been announced and will visit the university.

Dr. Larry M. Landis, director of state postsecondary review entity with the South Dakota Board of Regents in Pierre, S.D., is on campus today. He received his B.S.Ed. and M.S.Ed. in sociology from Western Illinois University and his Ph.D. in sociology from the University of Iowa.

From 1986-1995 he served as the vice president for academic affairs at Black Hills State University in Spearfish, S.D. He also served as the assistant vice president for academic affairs for Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa, from 1985-1986.

Dr. James C. Coomer will be on campus Friday. He is a professor of political science at Mercer University in Macon, Ga. He received his B.A. in political science from Carson-Newman College and his Ph.D. in political science from the University of Tennessee, Knoxville.

From 1989-1993, Coomer served as the senior vice president for academic affairs at Mercer University. From 1988-1989 he served as the dean of the Cecil B. Day College of Arts and Sciences at Mercer University.

Dr. Steven K. Pontius, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at Radford University in Radford, Va., will be on campus Tuesday, March 26. Pontius received his B.A. and M.A. in geography from Indiana University and his Ph.D. in geography from the University of Minn.

Pontius served as the chair of the department of geography from 1978-1991 at Radford University, and he served as the chair of the Southern Association of Colleges and School Institutional Self-Study at Radford University from 1990-1993.

Dr. Thomas Moore, provost and vice president for academic affairs at Central Washington University in Ellensburg, Wash., will be visiting Tuesday, April 2. He received his bachelor's degree from St. John Fisher College, his master's in education from State University of New York, and his Ph.D. in education from Rutgers University.

From 1987-1991, Moore served as the provost and vice president for academic affairs and student affairs for Kent State University in Kent, Ohio. He also served as the vice president for faculty Affairs and personnel at Kent from 1983-1987.

Dr. Lewis Jones, vice president for academic affairs at Minnesota State College and University System in Saint Paul, Minn., will be on campus Thursday, March 21. He received his B.S. in social science from St. Paul's College, his M.A. in American history from N. Carolina Central University. He received his Ph.D. in educational policy analysis and administration from the University of Iowa.

He served as vice president for academic affairs at Mankato State University in Mankato, Minn. from 1993-1995. He also served as dean of undergraduate studies at California State University in San Bernardino from 1991-1993.

Dr. Richard J. Collings, provost and vice president for academic affairs at Kutztown University of Pennsylvania, will be on campus on Monday, March 25. He received his B.A. in international studies from the University of Louisville, his M.A. in Latin American studies and his Ph.D. in political science from Tulane University.

Collings served as the dean of the college of liberal arts and sciences at Kutztown University from 1989-1991, and as assistant provost at Southeast Missouri State University from 1985-1989.

Dr. A. David Kline, dean of college of liberal arts and sciences at State University of New York, will be on campus Monday, April 1. He received his B.S. in biology from Wake Forest University, his M.A. in philosophy from N. Illinois University, and his Ph.D. in psychology from the University of Wisconsin. Kline serves as a professor in the department of philosophy at State University of New York. From 1984-1990, he served as the chair of the department of philosophy at Iowa State University.

While on campus, the candidates will be interviewed by a variety of organizations, including the Search Committee for the vice president of academic affairs, the Student Government Association, and the Faculty Senate.

The Search Committee will then present an unranked list to APSU President Dr. Sal Rinella. Rinella will make the final decision.

Sex on Internet may be banned

By ANGIE HARVILLE
staff writer

The controversy surrounding possible regulations of materials on the Internet continues to escalate as the legislative and judicial branches of the federal government go head to head in the debate centered on placing a ban on specific types of communication on the Internet.

On Feb. 15, U.S. District Judge Ronald L. Buckwalter ruled that part of the Telecommunications Act banning the transmission of "indecent" material is too vague in definition and could lead to misunderstandings of what is and is not obscene.

Buckwalter's decision came when he was approached by the American Civil Liberties Union and 18 other groups requesting an injunction to stop the enforcement of the law that is punishable by $250,000 or a two-year prison term.

The groups argue that the law violates freedom of speech and could create a chilling effect on Internet users.

Colleges and universities around the country could be affected if the injunction is not upheld. Many will have to install new policies to protect themselves from prosecution if the court rule in favor of the law.

Glen Carr, chair of the APSU Social Work department and board member of the ACLU, strongly opposes any type of restriction on the Internet. Carr also teaches the Human Sexuality course on campus and encourages his students to use the Internet for educational information, with some of the information being of adult nature.

"How do you define indecent?" Carr asked. "There's no standard."

"Obscenity has a definition; indecent doesn't," Carr added. He explained that the Supreme Court ruled that the local community should determine what is obscene by using a three-prong test. Every community must look at the nature of the material at hand to be prosecuted obscene.

Material must fail each part of the obscenity test in order to be pronounced obscene. Those parts include the following: material that appeals to prurient interest, meaning the material arouses the individual; material that is patently offensive, indicating disgust; and material that passes the Slaps test, which states the material has to be without any serious literal, artistic, political or scientific value.

"If a work hits all of those points, then it's obscene. The problem with obscenity is that it's harder to prosecute. Indecent is really overly broad," Carr said.

"Any type of ban on the Internet is clearly a violation of free speech and has no place in our law. You've got this new technology, and you don't need to put limits on it. It's a violation of the first amendment. It's electronic speech, but it's speech," Carr added.

Carr went on to point out other problems with the law. "You have to subscribe to the their contributions, both historically and presently, in this development of this country.

The celebration started the first day of March, and has continued with a two-day symposium held this past weekend at Woodard Library, a speech by Nobel Prize winner Betty Williams, a quilt show on display in Woodard Library featuring the works of the local quilters club, Clarksville's "Tuesday Needlers" and various readings and programs.

The purpose of Women's History Month is to bring to the front and focus on an often ignored or understated side of American history.

"So often in traditional history women's achievements are not fully focused on as they need to be," said Dr. Susan Calovino, coordinator of women's studies.

"They give us this month to recognize and celebrate women and their accomplishments."

The symposium was extended this year to two days to include a Saturday for community women who work or needed child care before they could attend.

Calovino said the experiment was successful. More community women and students attended than last year.

The quilt exhibit was coordinated by Dr. Dixie Webb, Art Historian and assistant professor of art.

The quilts, created by the local stitchers, represent an art form that is becoming increasingly popular. Webb is involved in women's fiber art, so the quilt exhibit is right up her alley.

"Dr. Webb not only organized the show, she physically hung the quilts," Calovino said.

"She stitched the muslin casing on the back of each quilt, got the wood and drilled the holes in them to make the hangers, then hung them from the ceiling. I don't know how she did it, but she deserves the credit for getting it done," Calovino said.

There will be a presentation to the quilt voted the favorite by viewers. The "Viewer's Choice Award" will be presented during a closing reception March 29 at 3:00 p.m. in the library.

The Book Talk selection this month will reflect the on-going theme of women and their role in society throughout history.

"The Chalice and the Blade: Our History, Our Future" discusses the author's theory of partnership versus dominator cultures. The discussion promises to "shed new light on today's problems including male-female conflicts."

Book Talk will be held Wednesday, March 27, 8:00a-12:30p in the UC Room 313.

Mock Trial team places fourth at national competition

ANGIE HARVILLE
staff writer

Austin Peay's Mock Trial team placed fourth in the National Mock Trial Competition held March 15-17 in St. Paul, Minn., with Robert Smith, president, taking the top attorney award.

Approximately 270 teams compete in the United States, with 40 top teams competing at the national level this year.

The team is composed of eight members, including Smith, Lola Sotinwa and Jason White as defense attorneys; Jim Allen, Kwame Cash, and Dawn Kenney as prosecuting attorneys; and Tiffany Hall and Carolyn Osman as witnesses.

Dr. David Kanervo, chair of political science and sociology, is the team's advisor, and Jill and Mark Nolan are coaches for the team and practicing lawyers in Clarksville.

Team members must possess well developed oratory skills, as well as acting and role playing abilities. "People who really do well are people with theatrical experience and dynamics because we have to act in the character of who we're supposed to be," Allen said.

"A lot of people that we went up against were not pre-law majors. On our team, we have various backgrounds, most are political science majors, but we do have English and business majors," he added.

"It was a chance to hone oratory skills. It involves a lot of extemporaneous speaking. I think the talents you develop help you think a lot more critically. Outside of playing attorneys and witnesses, we all did the same thing," Cash said.

Each member spends hours preparing for the tournaments. Because of the amount of time involved with each individual case, it is impossible to compete one-on-one with every team.

Austin Peay's team competed against four schools, including the University of Washington, Howard University and the University of Iowa.

Other top schools from Arizona, California and Iowa competed. Austin Peay's team beat Harvard University and other Ivy League schools after points were tallied.

"A trial lasts about three hours, and we can't go head-to-head with every school, so we are given points for attorney presentation, direct examination, cross examination, witnesses and the verdict."

"Each trial was judged by a sitting judge and practicing lawyer from the St.

Paul area," Allen explained. "This year we were lucky enough to have juries. The Mock Trial team is growing and expanding to high school Mock Trial teams. This year, the jury was made up of high school Mock Trial team members."

"I think the only disadvantage is and something I would like to see is Austin Peay was that many schools teach a Mock Trial course to give scholarships to players."

"This is something our team does in our own spare time. It does not receive academic recognition to the Allen said."

time, (Dykeman) taught me a lot about Tennessee women and gave me the desire to learn more," said Kelly Kerr, a senior history major. "She was very inspiring."

Saturday's sessions began with Dr. Jessie Carney Smith's, a librarian and professor at Fisk University, discussion of African American women in Tennessee.

Smith is the author of several books including "Epic Lives: One Hundred Black Women Who Made a Difference" and "Black Firsts: Two Thousand Years of Extraordinary Achievement."

She began by talking about past and present attitudes toward black women and continued by recognizing 55 black women connected to Tennessee in a slide presentation.

Both Dykeman and Smith followed their discussions with a book signing session.

The Dickson County Senior High School's Women's Ensemble, under the direction of Cindy Freeman, entertained those present at Saturday's luncheon.

Symposium events closed with a tour of the women's quilt exhibit in the Woodward Library, which will be on display through the end of March.

The conference, although focusing on Tennessee women, addressed the problems that men and women face in their interaction in the world concerning gender equality.

"After spending 17 years struggling in a male-dominated career field, I realize how important it is for women to be supportive of each other and work together, which was an idea I felt was strongly conveyed in this conference," senior Toni Coffman said.

"Being a history major, I realize how important it is to study women's history, to see their accomplishments large or small. I hope other women take the initiative to study women's history for the same reasons."

Internet; it's not accessible to everyone. Another problem occurs with how the United States would handle the law when information comes from other countries. It's a World Wide Web. This is a free society, let's keep it that way," he said. Carter suggested that parents take responsibility for their children and put less blame on others.

Many students seem to agree with Carter. Elias Ek, a junior mass communications and business major, said, "Broadcast TV and radio must protect children. That is not the case when you are searching the web because most indecent sites will have two or three disclaimers to verify age. That tells me that they've taken all precautions possible. There should be no ban whatsoever on the net. I think you can require disclaimers. The really bad stuff you have to register or subscribe to."

"Whatever happened to free speech?" asked Terry Riley, a senior majoring in psychology. "Whatever exchange takes place between adults through a computer system should be their right."

Christal Bricker, a sophomore nursing major, agreed. "It's a direct violation of my constitutional right to freedom of speech. I feel any actions against that right are illegal."

On the other hand, senior Gina Grasso supports the law. "I have a small child, and my six year old son knows how to operate the computer. I don't want him to see that. I don't think he should be able to sit at the computer when I'm not there and he's with the babysitter. But I agree that it's too easy for parents to blame people."

Christopher McAllister, a sophomore political science major, supports a ban as well. "It's not accessible to anyone, we kids, and there is no way to regulate it. Kids can download it under their parents names."

According to Charlie Carter, director of computer systems, there has been no discussion of banning sites here on campus. The Austin Peay Home Information answer to a question "What kind of information belongs on Peay's gopher?" is available.

The following information is adapted from a document by University Computing, University of Oregon, OR. While the majority of information readers are faculty, staff or students, Peay providers should know that their information probably will be read by outside the university community. Webmasters publishing material on their Internet sites have turned their Internet black to suggest that it restricts freedom of expression.

The decision of the court to be a partial victory for free speech, but expression on the Internet still at risk. This case may become a landmark in determining the future of the Internet. It will proceed in the next few weeks to a panel that will hear the arguments of both sides. A permanent injunction or further appeal would go to the Supreme Court.

Letter from the editor-in-chief

To run or not to run:

A choice to run a Pro-Life advertising supplement in a state university paper

There are times in every editor's life when the best and most comfortable decision is a simple question. Tough issues come, people get hurt, it would be easier to not deal with it.

Such is the case with one of this week's inserts, in the Human Life Alliance of America. They contacted us a few days ago about running the anti-abortion supplement and I quickly groaned.

Why, why, why, I thought? This is a pleasant issue. It has caused others to be murdered, families to be destroyed, and general emotional turmoil. And, by the perspective of life advocates, the death of tens of babies.

Why did I decide to run it?

Because I condoned what it had to say. I have a decision I consider just and fair to allow the choice to determine their life's course in their own. By that same token, I have also decided that the right not to have an abortion is as important as the right to.

To run or not to run the supplement was decided by the staff as a group. Issues like this are taken very seriously because we do not want actions misinterpreted by the university community. And, I'm proud to say no one said no, though staff members represent both sides of the abortion issue.

Frankly, the cold-hearted reason we ran the insert was because we got paid for it. Like any publication with advertisements, money talks loud. And the money we make at this newspaper directly benefits students in equipment expenditures, producing a better, more professional publication.

The soft-hearted reason we ran the insert was because if it had been our opinion and our insert, we would have wanted someone to allow us freedom of speech enough to at least pay for the privilege of running it.

As strongly as I feel that choice is an essential right for American women, I believe in the freedom of speech even more.

As strongly as I feel that choice is an essential right for American women, I believe in the freedom of speech even more. The First Amendment comes first.

So, we ask you, do not assume that we as a campus newspaper support or disagree with the information and opinions presented in the Human Life Alliance supplement. We are merely allowing them to occupy a fold of the paper with the three other advertising supplements of the week.

Smokers strangled by political, social nagging

By Lane Crawley
asst. opinion editor

Our society has reached a pinnacle of health awareness and concern probably unmatched in generations. Nearly every aspect of the media which we come into contact with is flooded with health ads, nutritional information and/or warning labels.

These bytes of advice frequently warn of the dangers of something we do everyday. Today, with the age in how we rate bad habits, anti-smoking commercials are now the reigning icons that focus on all addictions and烟雾.

Surprisingly enough to me, smoking receives as much attention as the usual use of narcotics. I guess it shouldn't really be a surprise that smoking is a bad habit in several respects; it stinks and has a negative effect on nearly all of one's major bodily organs.

For the reason of foul health, the tobacco industry is one of the most hated and vilified sections of the economy. We all know tobacco is the subject of public service announcements and whole organizations bent on lobbying against the big companies.

When it comes to politics, tobacco and those who produce it take a verbal lashing whenever the subject of smoking comes up. They are evil, they are heartless, they pursue money ruthlessly without considering their products' terrible effects on those who buy them.

Even as a non-smoker, I grow sick of this kind of rhetoric. Once again, the liberal pundits and enemies of (seemingly any kind of) business prove to us just how they can sum up an issue and lay blame on whomever they don't like, rather than the ones actually responsible for smoking, the individual smoker.

Tobacco companies can advertise their products all they want, and if no one cared to try them then they wouldn't. Before someone can become addicted to nicotine, he or she has to put a cigarette in their fingers, bring it up to the mouth, inhale, and then repeat the process many times.

A common figure one hears is that tobacco companies must recruit another 3,000 smokers every day in order to keep up their profits. I think that if the one group of people really wants to stop another group from smoking, then they should aim their ads and advice at the smoking friends of non-smokers. I'd wager that more smokers are recruited by friends than by with the from-out-of-nowhere sudden purchase of a pack.

If we are going to blame tobacco companies for 3,000 deaths a day according to the most congressmen, then we should also consider blaming condom companies for increased sexual activity among those who buy them.

We could also blame obesity on Nabisco, General Foods and all those other inconsiderate money-hungry who put all that sugar and fat in foods to make them taste good. We could also blame gun manufacturers for murder...whoops, I forgot, we do that.

Personally, my favorite method, (no doubt developed by some liberal brain child) concocted to put an end to smoking is the enlargement of the warning labels. This has got to be the most wildly optimistic anti-smoking venture ever. Do these people really think that smokers haven't been clued in about all that cancer stuff?

I say, if you don't want people to smoke, then make tobacco illegal and get it over with, otherwise leave it alone.

Although some smokers cannot resist smoking in the most inconvenient places, (restaurants, cars etc.) it is their right to smoke somewhere.

It's strange to me that alcohol is much more dangerous than cigarettes or smokeless tobacco, and no one considers banning alcohol or limiting its use any more than what little it is limited already.

But until it is made illegal, we should remember it is a legal drug, and people are not stupid, and they can make their own choices and live with the consequences.

Letters to the Editor

Reader upset with campus counselor

Dear Editor,

I personally know, and know well, someone who walked into the APSU "counseling" center, wanting to talk with someone.

When the receptionist started to make an appointment, the person said that they "needed to see someone now, if possible."

Upon entering the person into his office, he said, with door open, "I understand you're having an emergency." The person said, "No, I'm not having an emergency, I just really need to talk to someone."

He/she was then told, "You have seen three different people since you've been here. You will just come back here and see all the different people. We have a protocol here."

Then the person seeking counseling was treated to a lecture whose thrust was that what the person was asking was too inconvenient and that they had

"You make an appointment with a person and you stick with them."

After which the person left, thoroughly humiliated and more upset than ever, feeling too unimportant to warrant a counselor.

In the Feb. 7 All State, there was an article about compassion fatigue in the mental health field. It was the sweetly concerned words of Ron Oakland.

In the first paragraph, one of the symptoms mentioned is "preoccupation with petty aspects of job assignments." Ron Oakland needs a mirror.

Is his "make them feel like an annoyance and maybe they'll go away" and my coffee gets too cold" method an example of some new counseling school of thought? No, it sounds like someone preoccupied with the petty aspects of a job assignment.

Remember that you would be unemployed were it not for the student you dismissed and all the rest like him/her.

First and foremost, you are paid to help the student succeed.

The person you so cavalierly belittled is not a manager nor is that person an attention addict nor is he/she frivolously waste people's time. You, Ron Oakland, ignored your primary mission because someone's problem did not occur in your specific modality.

Reevaluate your priorities, Ron Oakland. If it were not for students wanting help, you'd be unemployed.

And, I might add, even if you were unpaid, as a counselor, you are obligated to pay attention.

A doctor that does not, for ANY reason, help someone in need, is morally wrong.

Not only is it wrong, but it is also illegal.

You can't see that, I suggest you find another line of work, preferably with things inanimate and unfeeling.

You fit right in. Simply put, what you did was callous.

Car alarms prove to be bothersome

Dear Editor,

Let's talk about what we know about car alarms. They are supposed to deter the theft of automobiles by drawing attention to the vehicle by alerting someone to the fact that the theft is in progress.

There are two forms of which I know: the silent alarm that notifies the owner by use of a remote device and the audible car alarm which draws attention upon itself by siren, a computer generated voice or perhaps in the future, computer generated gun shots.

I have no problem with either of these forms of alarm, but I do have a problem with the person who claims he had a clear shot from his upstairs window in the event it was ever activated. The former does not offend.

The latter are another matter entirely. It is one of those observations that you make when you are not thinking. This is a criminal act and should be addressed, but not here. We should return to the relationship between car alarm and an evil word like consumer. I read a paper somewhere that suggested rape victims yell fire instead of rape so people would become more likely to get involved. I personally would go to the assistance of either, but this is of no matter here. Or is it?

Car alarms never yell rape nor fire. They yell "Look at me." Currently we have a big problem with this don't we?

I suspect that the purpose of car alarms is no longer to draw attention to theft. The nobility of that purpose being somewhat dubious with which it is used.

I fear it is being replaced by one of today's new breed of Latin terms: "selficus-onius."

You ask that I vindicate my opinion with something more than the broadest of speculation. Very well, let us go about this in an empirical manner. One fine day while I was involved in trying to get a car to start, I found myself easily understood 200 years ago but now requires entire facilities. I heard the rhythmic sounds of a car alarm.

It would begin with a vigorous siren similar to that of a fire engine, then would repeat "Help me" in its computer-generated voice, and finally it attempted to engage the world with an inane amount of logic expounding the likelihood of apprehension.

The problem of course was that there was no criminal. There probably was never a criminal.

As a breeze had handled the car roughly. It was a good day and the sensitivity knew it had been jarred up.

He or she was in a world where sensitivity is carried to extremes, but even the most ardent supporters of political correctness would have to say this is obnoxious.

To carry on with our observations I will inform you that for thirty years we have come to investigate the matter, not the owner, not a police officer (I suspect they long ago formed opinions about car alarms), not a soul. Then when I was forced to go to the refrigerator for a beverage (thinking it thirsty) and the car alarm went off, I was forced to leave the observation post, but it was no use.

The owner, now satisfied that everyone knew that his car had the world's most brilliant alarm, looked for the opportunity moment to quit the vehicle.

He or she is obviously a cunning rascal, well-versed in the social psychology of the last twenty years. He or she understood that we suffer from constant amnesia. I know because later that day they appeared together. The appearance of this interesting piece of technology so overwhelmed me that I completely forgot my deep desire to strangle the owner.

Govs, Lady Govs advance to NCAA tourney

March Madness!

By BYRON SHIVE
sports editor

As Austin Peay State University students headed for spring break recently, "March Madness" swept over the APSU campus, as the men's and women's basketball teams both captured their respective Ohio Valley Conference tournament title—and with it, a berth in the NCAA Tournament.

For the Governors, the trip back to "The Dance" ended a nine-year drought. The Govs upset third-seeded Illinois back in 1987 before bowing to Final Four-bound Providence 90-87 in overtime.

For the Lady Governors, the trip to the NCAA's was the first of its kind in Austin Peay history.

The Governors once again received a No. 14 seed and were shipped off to Orlando, Fla., for a first-round date with Atlantic Coast Conference power Georgia Tech Friday night.

The Lady Governors also received a No. 14 seed and faced a Saturday night match-up against Clemson on the Lady Tigers' home floor in South Carolina.

The Governors, playing in front of a live national television audience on CBS, trailed the No. 13 Yellow Jackets by just four at the half-time break before Tech pulled out a 90-79 victory to advance.

The Lady Governors, on the other hand, trailed by just seven at the half, but went cold shooting from the floor in the second half, as Clemson rolled by 79-52.

In the men's game, center Reggie Crenshaw had the game of his life in being named "Player of the Game" for Austin Peay by CBS. The sophomore from Gallatin led the Governors with 22 points on eight-of-12 shooting, including two-for-two from behind the three-point arc.

Early season woe, rebounding, resurfaced to kill the Governors once again. The Yellow Jackets got numerous second looks at the basket after outrebounding the smaller Governors 40-29.

Austin Peay, winners of 10 of its last 11 games going in, staged a furious second half rally after Georgia Tech had pushed the lead to 14 points early on.

With 6:08 remaining to play, Stephon Marbury, the 'Jackets' stand-out freshman point guard, buried a three-pointer from the locker room to push the lead back to 13 points.

However, the Governors went on a 9-1 run to cut the lead to five with 3:30 to play, with sophomore sharpshooter Joe Sibbitt burying a 23-foot plus trey. But, following a Marbury lay-up and a pair of Crenshaw free throws, APSU would get no closer than five the rest of the way.

Bubba Wells, who almost single-handedly got the Governors into the NCAA Tournament with a 35-point performance against Murray State in the OVC Championships, missed a three-pointer that could have cut the lead to two in the final minutes.

However, the Yellow Jackets rebounded and hit their free throws down the stretch after Austin Peay was forced to foul.

Savage, playing in his final game as a Governor, impressed NBA scouts on hand with a 20-point performance. Savage also helped to contain a red-hot Matt Harping of Georgia Tech after he struck for 18 first half points.

Wells, who finished the season as the nation's second-leading scorer, hit for 16 points, while dishing out seven assists after being double- and triple-teamed.

Lost in the shuffle was point guard Colby Pierce's defensive job on Marbury, who nearly opted for a trip to the NBA straight out of high school last June.

Marbury finished with 17 points, but as Pierce fouled out in the final minute of play, Marbury approached and congratulated him on a good game.

The Governors, who ended the season at 19-12, never led in the game, but hung close to Georgia Tech throughout an exciting first half that saw 98 points get put on the board.

The Yellow Jackets began to stretch their lead late in the half and were cruising to the locker room before a pair of Savage three-pointers cut the gap to two in the final minute.

The Governors shot a blistering 60 percent in the first half, but cooled off in the second to finish at 45.6 percent for the game. Tech, on the other hand, remained hot throughout, shooting at a 56.7 percent clip for the game.

On a sad note, senior Cole Caston broke his ankle during a light practice on Thursday and was unable to play in his final game at Austin Peay.

Despite dismal 29 percent shooting, the Lady Governors managed to only trail 33-26 at halftime, as Clemson lit up the friendly confines of Littlejohn Coliseum by shooting 50 percent from the floor.

However, the Lady Governors shot worse in the second half (23.5 percent), while the Lady Tigers scorched the Austin Peay defense at a 61.3 percent clip.

That, coupled with a 54-39 rebounding advantage, sent the Lady Tigers into the second round and the Lady Governors back to Clarksville.

Despite the first half woes, the Lady Governors even with Clemson at 16 with 7:22 to play. However, run pushed the hosts into a point advantage before Thompson's three-point 1-91 mark cut the lead to seven.

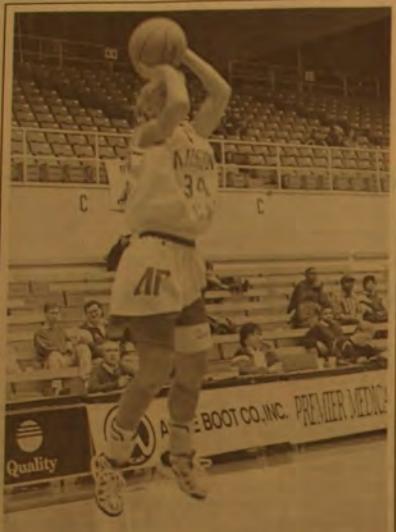

Thompson led the Governors with 14 points, Amanda Behrenbrucker had 11 points and 14 rebounds.

In the second half, the Governors got as close as 10 points to the Lady Tigers couple of occasions—both with 14:29 to play. However, Clemson outscored the Governors 38-14 the rest of the way going away.

Five seniors played one game for the Lady Governors, Sonja Cox, Wendy Kincaid, Stephanie Shelton, Theresa Sonia White, with their last guided the squad to its first win ever.

In the finest season the Lady Governor basketball several records were broken.

The Lady Governors finished the season at 21-4—the most wins ever in a year including a record for OVC. The Lady Govs' 12-game winning streak to end the season was the total season win total of 17 different past APSU teams.

Governors enter OVC slate seeking national prominence looking to break into the top rankings soon, the Austin Peay State University baseball team has rolled through the 1996 season posting an outstanding 17-4 record following a sweep of Murray State Sunday afternoon.

The Governors, winners of their first four games, scored a run in the bottom of the seventh inning in the win to post a 7-6 victory as Rich Elias remained strong on the season at 3-0 after giving up the victory.

The Govs recorded 12 hits on the day by catcher Ryan Bennett's four-outout that included a pair of doubles. The senior also had a pair of runs and batted a double.

Elias was not alone in his output, as Kris Runk, Mike Maser and Kent Brone also belted his fifth homerun of the season to aid the Governor.

The Govs came on in relief in the top of the seventh after the Racers had tied the game at six to record the final out and pick up the win.

The Governors continued their offensive explosion in the nightcap, belting 11 hits in a 12-0 blowout. The score included an 11-run outburst in the third inning that all but sealed the victory.

Standout newcomer pitcher Mike Eikenberry went the distance to pick up his fourth win of the season against no defeats. The Indianapolis native pitched a two-hit masterpiece while striking out six Racers.

Runk and Chuck Abbott led the offense with a pair of hits, with one of Abbott's his ninth double of the year. In the lone at-bat, local product Billy Mortimore also belted a double.

The key to the fast start for the Governors has been a potent offense, steady defense and strong pitching.

The offensive juggernaut is averaging almost nine runs per game, including 10 runs per contest in the 17 wins. The team has recorded at least 10 hits in every game but two—a pair of losses.

A team fielding percentage of .954, coupled with a staff earned run average of 4.12 have aided the cause, as well.

"The key for us this year is that we have a veteran ballclub," said head coach Gary McClure, in his ninth season at the Governors' helm. "We have eight out of nine the team in at-bats (86), hits (40), doubles (10), triples (four) and on-base percentage (.526).

The Governors have two other players batting over .400 in Bennett, another major league prospect at catcher, at .444 and Mortimore, in limited action, at

"We feel we have a lot of talent this year on our club. We have great hitting, good depth and excellent pitching."

—head coach Gary McClure

starters back from last year and we feel we have a lot of talent this year on our club. We have great hitting, good depth and excellent pitching."

Abbott leads the Governor bat attack with a .465 average. The junior shortstop, who is being eyed by major league scouts, also leads .421. Nearly half of Mortimore's hits have been for extra bases, though.

The Govs have no less than nine other players batting over .300, including Sloan's .394.

Thirdbaseman Nate Manning, yet another major league prospect, has demonstrated tremendous power from the plate, with 18 of his 30 hits going for extra bases. The senior leads the Governors in slugging percentage (.859), home runs (nine), runs scored (35), total bases (67) and runs batted in (30).

The team has been aggressive on the basepaths, too, racking up 44 steals. The Govs are paced by Brown's eight steals, while Abbott (seven-for-eight) and Benji Zimmerman (six-for-six) have been just as felonious.

Defensively, Maser has been a model of consistency at first base, with 146 put outs and 11 assists to go against just one error.

Bennett has been just as effective behind the plate, with just three errors, while recording 113 put outs and 10 assists.

Eikenberry, a transfer from Lincoln Trail Community College in Illinois, has been the Governors' ace thus far, leading the team in wins (four), complete games (two) and innings pitched (35.2).

Elias has been one of the top pitchers for the Governors out of the bullpen, making nine appearances. Along with his three wins against no defeats, the senior hurler has also registered the team's only save this season.

Also pitching well for the squad is Craig Smith, a junior college transfer who leads the team in games started (six) and strikeouts (25), while posting a 3-2 mark.

With the Govs' outstanding start, they are threatening to crack the Top 25 national poll.

"I think success breeds success," said Coach McClure. "The team is becoming more and more confident. We don't concentrate on the national level, but sometimes when you play at a small school like Austin Peay, you have to prove things a little more. We've really put it to some excellent teams this year and that is going to do nothing but help us with the conference starting up."

"The biggest thing overall about this team is that they come to the park ready to play everyday—and ready to play hard. That's what separates them from other ballclubs."

Lady Govs' softball squad struggling for consistency as conference schedule awaits

BYRON SHIVE

Sports editor

With the Ohio Valley Conference slate already underway, the Austin Peay State University softball team is looking for consistency in its all-around game despite a 2-15 record.

On yesterday's home match-up against Southeast Missouri State at Petrus Park, the Lady Govs, who were swept by the Northeastern Illinois in a tiebreaker Monday afternoon, fell to UT-Martin today for a 1-11 loss. The Lady Govs are looking to improve on their OVC record.

The squad will be in Knoxville this weekend for a seven-team, round-robin tournament hosted by the University of Tennessee.

Despite the lackluster record, head coach Chris Austin feels the team can be better if improvements are made in several vital areas.

"We have played better than our record indicates," he said. "It's the little things that are beating us. Overall, we've been our own worst enemy. We're not hitting the ball very well. Defensively, it seems like every time we make a mistake and allow runners on, the opposing team manages to score."

According to Coach Austin, two bright spots for the Lady Govs at the plate this season have been shortstop Andrea Miller, the OVC "Player of the Year" last season, and Amanda Travis.

Putting an all-around game together has been a problem for the squad, which is a very young bunch with limited experience.

"Mentally and physically, we're not playing all-around good softball right now," said Coach Austin. "That's putting a lot of pressure on our pitching staff, which is compounded by the weather."

"The main thing is, we're playing with a very young team. Everyone wants to win, but they have to realize that the conference hasn't really started yet. They just need to try to learn and improve, so that once conference does start, we can start winning some games and get a good seed for the tournament."

Right now, a winning streak couldn't hurt matters any.

"We just need to get a couple of wins strung together to take the pressure off the team as a whole. Maybe then, they can settle down, relax and just play. If we start hitting the ball and playing better defense, that can easily happen."

The Lady Govs are 1-11 overall.

CAA Tournament enters Sweet Sixteen stage with national champion candidates still a mystery

BYRON SHIVE

Sports editor

With the departure of Austin from the NCAA men's basketball tournament, the picture of national champions has become cloudy.

Kentucky is a two-to-one favorite to win the whole shebang with its first two opponents 10 points a piece, but haven't been in this position before, which of the last 15 teams left in "The Big 12" has a chance to prove them wrong?

It certainly will not be a team in the Big 10, or is it the Big Six, as in, "it oughta be a sin for that sorry conference to get that many teams in the NCAA Tournament each year!"

After embarrassing itself last year by having every member in the tourney gone after the first weekend, the Big 10 duplicated the same feat again this year.

Anyway, Massachusetts has looked good all year long, but did the Minutemen peak too soon?

A few squads that seem to be playing right now and will certainly be tough to beat come tip-off time are Georgia Tech, Georgetown and Mississippi State.

And what about Arkansas? Bill's Boys win the national title two years ago, lost it last year and became the last team to get into "March Madness" this season as a No. 12 seed in the East. Uh-oh! The Hogs are still around!

Kansas appears to be peaking, too, and remember that the Jayhawks were picked to win the whole thing by quite a few pre-season magazines. However, Kansas faces a stern test in Arizona, who managed to make it out of the first round this year.

And if Wake Forest and Utah can manage to keep away from the flu virus, perhaps they can make a run for New Jersey.

With all the hype Kentucky is receiving, and with Mississippi

State and Arkansas' recent success, Georgia is the forgotten team remaining from the SEC (which, by the way Big 10, is 8-0 thus far!).

Speaking of forgotten teams, Louisville is the forgotten squad left from the Bluegrass.

If Texas Tech can break the way Darwin Ham breaks backboards, perhaps the Red Raiders will still be around in a few weeks.

And I haven't even mentioned perennial favorites Cincinnati and Connecticut.

If it appears that I straddled the fence on picking a national champ this year, your reading comprehension level is pretty good!

Mother talks of family's battle with AIDS

By JOHN ALLEY AND
RANDY OVERSTREET
guest writer and features editor

"If anyone was going to beat AIDS, it was going to be Ryan. I was really bitter and upset with everything," Jeanne White-Ginder, mother of AIDS victim Ryan White, said passionately when she spoke at Austin Peay Monday, March 11.

White-Ginder started telling about her family's courageous battle against AIDS a year after Ryan died. Two senators persuaded her to come to Washington to speak on the subject. After refusing several times, she finally did. Now she travels around the country speaking to college campuses about the disease and prevention. Her goal is to educate.

"Education is our cure for this disease. Educating younger people about AIDS will help us overcome the real obstacles," White-Ginder said.

Ryan White was circumcised when he was three days old, and he bled for three days after. They discovered he was a hemophiliac, and the doctors told White-Ginder that he would not be able to play contact sports. They said that if he were ever in a car accident, his chances of surviving any surgery would be very slim.

Because of hemophilia, Ryan had to take a clotting factor. This factor is how he later contracted AIDS. In 1984, Ryan and his family were told that he had AIDS.

"I was just a mom when this misunderstood disease entered my life. I thought our family had it good until Ryan contracted AIDS. There are so many people involved in the picture that get hurt," White-Ginder said.

Kokomo, Indiana, Ryan's hometown, did everything the community could to keep Ryan from attending school, but Ryan fought for his right to an education. "I wanted to be involved in his learning. That was my hope and dream. He really wanted to go to school. Education meant so much to Ryan. The community's main focus was to keep Ryan out of school. Mine was to keep Ryan alive," White-Ginder said.

Although he won his right to attend school, the community's ignorance about the disease led them to keep calling Ryan obscenities.

"People wrote 'fag' and other obscenities on his locker and folders his first day back. People believed you had to do something wrong to contract the disease. When you know people are wrong because they are uneducated, it is easier to go on," White-Ginder said.

Ryan's struggle attracted media and several celebrities, including Elizabeth Taylor, Michael Jackson and Elton John. Ryan co-hosted an AMFAR benefit with Taylor, and he later spent time with John in Los Angeles.

A movie was made about Ryan's life with AIDS, and Ryan played a small part in the film. He worked 13 hours a day helping the producers accurately portray him.

After battling AIDS for five and a half years, Ryan died.

"I thought it was the end of the world. I didn't think I could handle losing one of my children. He lived five and a half years longer than doctors expected," White-Ginder said.

After Ryan's death, the Ryan White Care bill was presented to insure healthcare to patients with AIDS. White-Ginder created the Ryan White Foundation. The foundation is dedicated to educating adolescents about the many ways of preventing AIDS.

"Because kids can't tell their parents that they're having sex, we need to assume that they are. We need to be able to talk about AIDS, but not in the heat of passion or under the influence of drugs and alcohol, when we're in charge," White-Ginder said.

White-Ginder is writing a book that will be available next spring. Ryan wrote a book that was completed after his death and is available now through the Ryan White Foundation at 1-800-444-RYAN.

"I will see my son again someday, and my miracle is that he won't have hemophilia or AIDS," White-Ginder said.

White-Ginder's advice for students is to remember those people who have died from AIDS, remember people living with AIDS and become aware of the ways to prevent the disease.

White-Ginder's life was changed forever by the disease, and she tells her story in order to educate others.

"The only way I can talk about AIDS is telling my story. I have a super son from whom I have learned so much," White-Ginder said.

Greek Scene

By MARK CARTWRIGHT
staff writer

With midterms finally over and the end of spring break, we are finally in the home stretch. Keep your heads up and your noses in the books.

Here are just a few of the proud achievements and upcoming events of some of the Greek chapters here at Austin Peay.

Phi Beta Sigma cleaned their adopted highway on Kraft Street Saturday.

They would like to extend their thanks to all those that came out to support them for Sigma Week, and they are looking forward to a great rest of the semester.

Pikes Peak Week is happening this week. To celebrate, Pi Kappa Alpha is having a party with a live band on Friday night at the Warehouse.

The party will be open to APSU students only, and all proceeds will be going to Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Clarksville.

Kappa Sigma wants to thank everyone who came to the pep rally on Thursday to support the Govs basketball team. They are anxiously looking forward to their formal which will be held at Lake Malone Resort during the last weekend of March.

Delta Sigma Theta will be holding a forum on women's issues such as breast cancer on Monday, April 8. There are plans in the works for Chi Omega and Delta Sigma Theta to put together an all-Greek talent show at the end of the semester to promote Greek unity. For more information, you may contact Yolanda Pritchard of Delta Sigma Theta or Susan Argo of Chi Omega.

Chi Omega will be doing volunteer work for the General Care Convalescent Home on March 20. Their pledge presentation will take place on March 24, and they would like to thank all who helped with the pledge dinner auction this past week.

Gamma Nu Chapter of Zeta Phi Beta is proud to announce that Sigma Phi Epsilon is the winner of Zeta Phi Beta's Penny War that took place during Feb. 27-29. They thank each organization for their support and enthusiasm. They will be hosting a plate lunch and delicious home cooking Friday, March 22, 11 a.m. They welcome and organize Mys-Chief, Devious, Vixen, Playgirl, Orator, Illinois Tee-Kay-O for becoming members of Zeta Phi Beta.

All Greeks who would like to see their accomplishments and upcoming events in print need to submit the information to Mark Cartwright, P.O. Box 6336 the Thursday before the issue that information should be printed. No late entries will be printed.

The Austin Peay Chapter of the National Honor Society of Phi Kappa Phi extends its congratulations to the juniors, seniors, graduate students, and faculty who are eligible to join the society in 1996.

STOP SLEEPING WITH YOUR PROFESSORS.

Is it the sound of that whispery voice, or those big, intellectual words? If your professors are putting you to sleep, Revive with Vivarin®. Don't let fatigue get the best of you. Vivarin® is the safe way to stay mentally alert, with the same caffeine as about two cups of coffee.

So stay sharp in class. Don't sleep your way to the bottom.

Revive with VIVARIN
