Will 3rd time be charm for SGA?

By KRIS PHILLIPS
assistant news editor

One week ago Scott Cowan, Janice Miller and Kathleen Payne were celebrating apparent victories in the Student Government elections.

Today, the three are going through a second run-off election, after presidential candidate Rosemary Hall brought allegations of election wrongdoings before the student tribunal.

On Wednesday, April 18, the student tribunal, after a lengthy deliberation, decided the run-off election of April 11 was invalid and ordered a second run-off election.

"No one item Ms. Hall presented was enough to declare the election invalid," Herman Scott, chief justice of the student tribunal, said.

"However, the student tribunal feels all allegations together certainly raises questions. It is important to note that there was a difference of only 20 votes between the candidates running for the office of president."

"This small number coupled with numerous violations of the elections rules leaves the student tribunal with no other alternative but to order a new run-off election."

After Scott read the announcement, the crowd at the press conference had mixed reactions.

"That's their decision," Cowan said.

Outside the press conference, many of Hall's supporters were jubilant.

"I have never felt so happy in all of my life,"

Chartrisse Champlain, SGA senator said. "Justice has been served. If one thing was wrong (with the election), the whole thing is wrong."

Even executive secretary-elect Kathleen Payne, who won her runoff against Kristi Seaton by six votes, was excited the elections were invalid.

"The first time I ran, I was happy that I got the most votes. The second time, I was happy that I won by six," Payne said. "I'm happy again that she (Hall) gets to do it again—that we all get to do it again."

The run-off elections will be held today and will run through Thursday in the University Center.

Although many are happy with the tribunal's decision, there were those who seemed distraught.

"Obviously, I'm not happy with it," Cowan said. "I'm a man caught in between a situation that doesn't involve me, really. It's a personal thing between Rose and Steve (Hecklinger), and I just happen to be caught in the middle. But, I'll live by their decision and do it again next week. I haven't lost yet."

Hall doesn't agree with Cowan's accusations.

"Honestly, I just don't see how Scott can think he was caught in the middle anymore than I was," Hall said. "If he could put himself in my position, to see what it must have meant to me to take the chance to step out on the front line like that, knowing that I would automatically alienate myself."

Because the complete run-off election was judged invalid, all three offices, president, vice president and executive secretary, will be rerun.

Reactions from each candidate varied.

•Janice Miller, vice presidential candidate, said "I don't know what to think about it. I guess the student tribunal did what they thought was right. I guess I'm upset because I thought the election was fair, but I wasn't there."

•Michelle Vaden, vice presidential candidate, said "It is a lot of hassle to run again. I've got to go back and put up signs all over campus and redo every thing. But I think it is good because, that if it was unfair it could of affected me too, since I lost."

•Kathleen Payne, executive secretary candidate, said "I hope it will be a better turnout this time, that all this stuff will not be in vain. But I know it isn't because it is going to be run fairly this time, by the rules."

•Kristi Seaton, executive secretary candidate, said, "I'm very excited. I have another chance. I feel this way because the secretary race was so close. I'm going to campaign a lot harder so people will know me."

SGA president Shea Rollins was not encouraged when she heard the allegations were mentioned.

"When the tribunal was brought up, I knew that

Candidacy announced

Stating unacceptable candidates and the question of objectivity of the two presidential candidates, Celina Blake has decided to declare herself a write-in candidate in the SGA run-off elections.

She said she realizes what she is doing may cause many people to look at her as trying to bring bad publicity to the campus.

"Sometimes we need negative publicity to change ground rules," Blake said.

Blake also said she believed the SGA should work for the students and she would make that priority.

However, since she announced her candidacy and distributed election material, problems have arisen.

"Shea (Rollins, current SGA president), called me and told me to remove all my campaign material," Blake said.

She continued, Rollins informed her she couldn't go through with her campaign.

Rollins said Blake couldn't go through with her intentions because the SGA follows Robert's Rules of Order. This specific book of rules does not allow such actions.

Rollins added. "I think it's good she feels concerned enough to put something up."

Blake said she was going to go through with her plans.

APSU turns out to clean up

By KRIS PHILLIPS
assistant news editor

Nearly 200 Austin Peay State University faculty, staff and students turned out Saturday to do their part in insuring a clean environment.

Adopt-A-Highway, a statewide program, provides an opportunity for volunteers from civic, service and other organizations to become involved in the preservation of our state's natural beauty.

According to chairperson of the APSU Community Activities Committee, Dr. Camille Holt, Saturday's clean up was an activity for the community to look forward to.

"This is a function of the Community Activities Committee and we will be doing trash and litter pick-up for the future, four times a year."

Holt said the "volunteer effort" will take place once a quarter.

The group of volunteers collected the trash starting at College Street from Riverside Drive to Kraft Street and also Sixth Street from in front of the University to Madison Street.

One of the participants was APSU's president, Dr. Oscar C. Page. He said this function will be one of several headed by the newly formed Community Activities Committee.

"This is one of our first efforts to organize the total university into a common effort to assist the community," Page said.

He went on to say the university is "excited" about being involved in the community, especially in helping keep it clean.

There will also be many more activities the university will be getting involved in.

"There will be other community projects," Page said. "For instance, Walk America is an effort to turn out a lot of people from the university to participate in the project and a lot of others that will occur."

Page went on to say this kind of community involvement is something that was a goal of his administration and the turnout at Saturday's event was "excellent, really excellent. I was very pleased with the turnout."

APSU junior Scott Padgett was one of the students involved. He explained why he was willing to give up his Saturday to pick up garbage.

"It's very important to keep everything at Austin Peay clean," Padgett said. "The campus usually looks pretty good because we have maintenance people who take care of it, but they can't do everything."

Padgett also said it's not just APSU the group helped, but Clarksville as well.

"It is very important we keep Clarksville clean because it's a historic site and I want to be proud of Clarksville and want to keep it clean."

ROTC battalion honored with Gen. Douglas MacArthur Award

Members of Austin Peay State University's ROTC battalion have proven themselves outstanding once again by being named recipients of the States Cadet Command and the MacArthur Foundation in Norfolk, Va. The 1990 award is the second annual foundation award.

"Winning the award says we have good, dedicated cadre who know how to recruit, counsel and prepare the cadets for camp."

Second ROTC Region Gen. Douglas MacArthur Award for medium-sized ROTC programs.

The award was established by the United order of merit. Col. Randal T. Gray, 3rd Brigade commander, Fort Knox, Ky., presented the award during a brief ceremony at APSU last Friday.

"Winning the award says we have good, dedicated cadre who know how to recruit, counsel and prepare the cadets for camp," said Lt Col Riley J. Smith, ROTC battalion commander. "We have high quality cadets who do well at camp and on the accession boards.

"We also get outstanding support from the university and the community. They support us fully and give us a great atmosphere in which to work. In addition, Fort Campbell provides us with the unit support and the terrain for conducting field training. All of these areas are very important to the program."

Austin Peay competed with all medium-sized ROTC programs in Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri, Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee and West Virginia. Last year, the cadets won the award in the small university category. Due to changes in categories, APSU was able to compete in the medium category this year.

there wasn't going to be a winner or loser, everybody lost."

Rollins said she disagreed with the tribunal decision because "Dr. Weast had the ballots counted by the internal auditor; there were 612 ballots and 612 names marked off."

Weast said what has transpired has been handled and will be continued to be handled by the students.

"I think the tribunal did an excellent job in reviewing the situation, and I stand behind the tribunal and whatever decision they make in this case," Weast added.

He went on to say the university is doing its best to stay out of the controversy so it wouldn't look as if it was taking sides.

Weast said to ensure these goals the SGA must: act responsibly in representing the students they were elected to represent, work with each other and when any function is planned, make sure it's planned well in advance and thoroughly.

"They must work with one another," he added. "They must tolerate one another and be reasonable individuals."

He added he would be helping the new officers and senators, but he could not do the job for them or make them get along.

Many of the allegations stem from what has been called a "personal vendetta" between Hecklinger and Hall.

In a written statement, Hecklinger stated he felt "the tribunal's decision was made in the best interest of the students. However, as Scott Cowan pointed out in defending his case, the question was if all 10 or so points really made the election unfair."

He said points such as the election booth opening at 9 a.m. instead of 8:30 a.m. as was announced was enough to constitute another election. As far as a personal vendetta, he said, "many of the points were due to miscommunication, including the two accusations against myself," he wrote.

He said the hearing and the points made against him were not surprising. "This is all part of working for the public and part of our democratic system," he said.

Hall had other views.

"The issues I raised questioning the validity of the run-off election were not personal in nature, they were based on fact," Hall wrote in a prepared statement.

She also felt redeemed by the tribunal's decision.

"I felt that people hearing the testimony made up their minds by the time they left there," Hall said.

"If nothing else, we need to look at this process. If we don't wind up changing it, we definitely need to next year."

She said if there is one thing she hoped to have instilled in students' minds, it would be "awareness."

"If it was a personal thing, I could have adjusted many times before, in different manners," she said.

"People don't think about their school until they leave. Then they might wonder what is going on. Being a member of the SAC gives people a channel through which they can keep in

For the past month SAC members touch," Barnwell said.

AP students, faculty clean up

"It helps build the university community that is what the whole project was about we're trying to get everybody together to make this a more a 'homey' environment I think we're doing it."

He went on to say he thought the awareness the students receive about the environment and Clarksville was "good for everyone."

Holt said she was pleased with the turnout and pleased at the fact the weather cooperated. She said the ROTC cadets had picked up enough garbage to fill 50 trash bags on Friday.

Holt said the Community Activities Committee will continue to work hard to do their part.

"We have a very strong community," Holt said. "There is not one person who hasn't worked real hard all year. Most people on the committee are interested in protecting the environment and keeping our grounds clean and giving something back to the Clarksville community."

"There will be another pickup in July and we just hope that people will continue their interest and hang on to their T-shirts and come back," Holt said.

Earth Day's over ; problems remain

Earth Day may be over, but should we forget about the message behind this holiday until next year? No.

The Austin Peay community is in dire need of renovations where our attitudes and habits are concerned. We need programs devoted to recycling and preservation of the environment to educate the students, staff and faculty.

Where are the containers specifically for aluminum cans? They aren't easily found on campus unless you drive over to WAPX-FM, the Trahern Building, Dunn Center or a few other locations.

Where are the containers specifically designed for scrap computer paper? They aren't easy to find in the computer labs.

These are just two examples of how the university can take measures to recycle trash that will otherwise be dumped in landfills. Just think, if newspapers from the 1940s are being dug out of landfills now, people in 2030 may find the paper you're reading now unless we change our ways.

It's been rumored that the university is upgrading its efforts to recycle. It's also rumored that there are places to put cans on campus, but we cannot know where they are unless the administrators tell us.

Recycling is not the only issue to consider. Think about the destruction of the atmosphere by car exhaust and aerosol sprays. Think of water and electricity conservation.

We need to educate ourselves on how to preserve our planet. Until the university provides us with educational programs on recycling or conservation of water and electricity, we should all find out on our own how we can help.

The message behind Earth Day is an important one not to be forgotten. To help find out what you can do, look in the Yellow Pages under "recycling" for starters.

We've been living for years believing one person's trash is another person's treasure. The real treasure is our planet, not the acres of landfills that are growing everyday.

Don't wait for someone to come and tell you how to help. Go out and help on your own.

Could this be an AP administrator with recycling on his mind?

I can't; I'm going to New Orleans.

You want to get out of this hole for a few days?

Can't; Daddy's sending his Lear jet down this weekend. He wants me to go to Jamaica!

Hey Ric! Want to go to Nashville? The Knights are playing. Let's go!

Can't. I've got to graduate.

Graduation. That's what we're in school for, right? We're spending eight good years of our lives, molding our minds so that we can take our place in society as the future leaders of the planet. Yet, one week of each spring semester we are rewarded by our college of higher learning with a week to let our minds rest, relax and recreate, thus making us more energetic and willing to learn.

I didn't get a spring break this year. I know! Break out the violins, right? I stayed right here in Clarksvegas. While all the rest of you freshmen, sophomores and juniors partied your immature minds out because somehow three weeks beforehand you had scraped, saved, scrimped or stolen daddy's credit card to escape this hell that our professors refer to as higher education I stayed home.

That's okay. I didn't mind. I had fun too. I had the opportunity to complete projects and catch up on my homework. I picked up more hours at work. Sat on my front porch. Watched the rain. Read a novel. CLEAN MY HOUSE??? GOD! I WAS SO BORED! I bounced off the walls! Called 1-900 numbers. Got a date. Got drunk. Called the home shopping network. Bought a $6,000 completely computerized, remote control RCA television set in stereo just because I have a Visa Card and too good credit!

But, alas, I came back to school prepared. Eager to get this final year of my undergraduate life completed. Yes, I'm finally graduating.

I'm walking the line this spring. I've always hated going to graduations, but considering that this is my own, I shall make the exception.

Relatives, immediate family and friends sit out in the audience bored to tears but happy for you.

When I graduated from high school, I raked in over 100 bucks. Considering that was in 1982, it was only high school, and the fact that the cost of living has gone up, I think I'm coming due for a RAISE!

Mistakes are human nature

By MARY LEE WATSON
executive editor

"This looks terrible." "I love it."
"They spelled my name wrong."

Sound familiar? I've heard these phrases echo throughout the campus this past week in reference to the 1990 Governors' Pride yearbook.

Some like it, some hate it and some don't really care.

The hard work put into the book is overlooked and overshadowed by imperfections that are magnified ... imperfections that will be in any yearbook.

FACE IT - perfection is sought, but hard to achieve.

How many perfect people do you know? I don't know anyone that's perfect and don't think I'll ever meet anyone perfect.

I've always heard - you can't please everyone all the time - but, yes, most of us continue to try and conquer this cliche.

Every week The All State is printed, it's easy to sit back and pick out mistakes, but hard to realize a good layout design or excellent coverage on a story.

Human beings get motivated, usually, because they're mad - disapprove of something or someone - and mistakes usually motivate feedback that good things just don't induce.

The yearbook is not the only origin of these types of complaints.

For example, there's another saying that floats around during election time - vote, because if you don't vote, you won't have any grounds to complain.

Similarly, I like some artwork better than others, but I don't point out mistakes, laugh or even become violent with rage when I see art that doesn't appeal to me or offends me. I wouldn't be able to get started on the art, much less make the mistakes.

To ere is to be human and we are all human ... I hope!

Let's try to remember that everything won't be perfect in fact, nothing will be perfect. Let's not destroy things with our tongues that we don't understand, didn't contribute to or don't even care about.

Student declares new candidacy

Dear Editor:

After all the hoopla and problems surrounding the recent SGA elections, here we are for the third time attempting to elect officers for next year. With all of the controversy, it is my opinion that there is an alternative to the selections offered to us. I am offering myself as that solution.

I am announcing my candidacy as a write-in candidate for SGA President in our THIRD SGA elections. I believe that in the current situation, it is necessary for Austin Peay to have executive officers who will treat all campus groups equitably, and who cannot be swayed by much of the interpersonal stress currently exhibited by some of our elected officials.

I am not running because I hold a grudge against candidates already running. I am not running because I want the "power." I am running because I think there are things that need to be accomplished at APSU, and I believe that I can forward those causes.

I have two years' experience on SGA ('84-85, and '85-86). I am familiar with parliamentary procedure and espouse strict adherence to it. I support monthly student forums on campus to address issues important to the student body. I support a more active, activist SGA that will stand up for the rights and interests of all the previously unbiased executive officers. Can the SGA effectively handle these issues without prior prejudice?

Our student government is ostensibly the representation of we, the students. To ask us to decide in a race jeopardized by personal vendettas, prejudice and fraud without any alternatives is unfair to us. I hope that during the THIRD runoff election you will write my name in on the ballot for SGA president.

It's time that our SGA consisted of concerned students, and not students who allow their position to be compromised by pettiness.

Please vote, and help to make this change.

Campus food lacks nutrition

Dear Editor:

While reading The Leaf Chronicle's April 16, 1990, story about Austin Peay's upcoming forced meal plan, I really had to laugh. Gary Levy, director of residence life, supported this plan, saying "We have students on campus who are eating unhealthy food."

We sure do, because some are eating the food served on this campus. Mr. Levy, have you noticed that most of the campus food available to students has the potential to kill us? Death by an overdose of cholesterol and fat is not exactly in the best interest of our

Have you noticed that a good part of the food here is deep fried? They'd probably deep fry the bread if they could find a way to do so. And if our campus officials are so concerned about our health, why are there soda machines in every building, but no fruit juice machines? Why does it cost more to buy a piece of fruit in the grill than it costs to buy a bag of chips?

Let's hope that if the university really is concerned about the health of students, they'll begin right here at home by making healthier foods available on campus. Once they do that, it might be easier to stomach a mandatory meal plan.

Psych students offer suggestions

Dear Editor:

We the students of Industrial Psychology 4500/5500, in an endeavor to recruit quality students to this university, do hereby tender these suggestions for your perusal and dissemination:

1. To establish an on-campus sponsor system for incoming freshmen. This sponsor would be responsible for assisting the new student in the transition from high school to college life. The sponsor program would be brought up to speed by establishing training procedures during the summer. If it could be done, the sponsor and the recipient should come from the same school and possibly have even been recruited by the sponsor. Training would consist of acquainting the sponsor with all the campus facilities from bookstore to health services. Sponsors would come from area high schools through the Austin Peay clubs established on those campuses. Funding for the sponsor and AP club programs would come from alumni fund raising activities. Along with this effort would come a new advertising campaign focusing on the renovations going on on campus and the "new spirit of caring in education at Austin Peay" or "providing the world with caring professionals."

2. In keeping with the suggestions in part 1, there could be established a "student recruiter" program to involve more students in recruiting by providing incentives for bringing in students. Those incentives could be reduced tuition costs based on the number of students recruited by each student. There would be a minimum number of students needed to qualify for the incentive program. The cost of the program would be, in part, offset by the retention of each student recruited per year. There might even be merchandise given in lieu of cash; such as computers or word processing systems from corporate sponsors.

3. With the increasing age of the student population and increase in the number of non-traditional students attending college, more emphasis should be placed on recruitment and services available to the non-traditional student:

A. Recruiting: There must be policy established for needs identification of the non-traditional student and the mechanisms for implementing the policy. One of the policy areas should address the recruiting of the non-traditional student. With the increased need to update or change job skills, AP finds itself in a unique position of being able to meet those needs. AP should send recruiters to various factories, businesses and other areas around Clarksville to first explore and assess the growing needs of business and industry. Efforts on the part of the university should be made to meet those stated needs with the cooperation of business and industry in funding or helping to find funding for the programs. Once the programs are in place and funded, active recruitment can begin.

B. We also feel that a more active ad campaign needs to be implemented and in more market demographics. There needs to be more aggressive recruiters going after the better students to raise the quality of students going to Austin Peay.

We hope that these suggestions, for that is what they are, will give you some idea of what the students are thinking and may even give you an idea to use. Research on other campuses has shown that sponsoring or mentoring has been a good way of helping lonely students to cope with the changes that come from leaving home and family.

Student urges others to vote

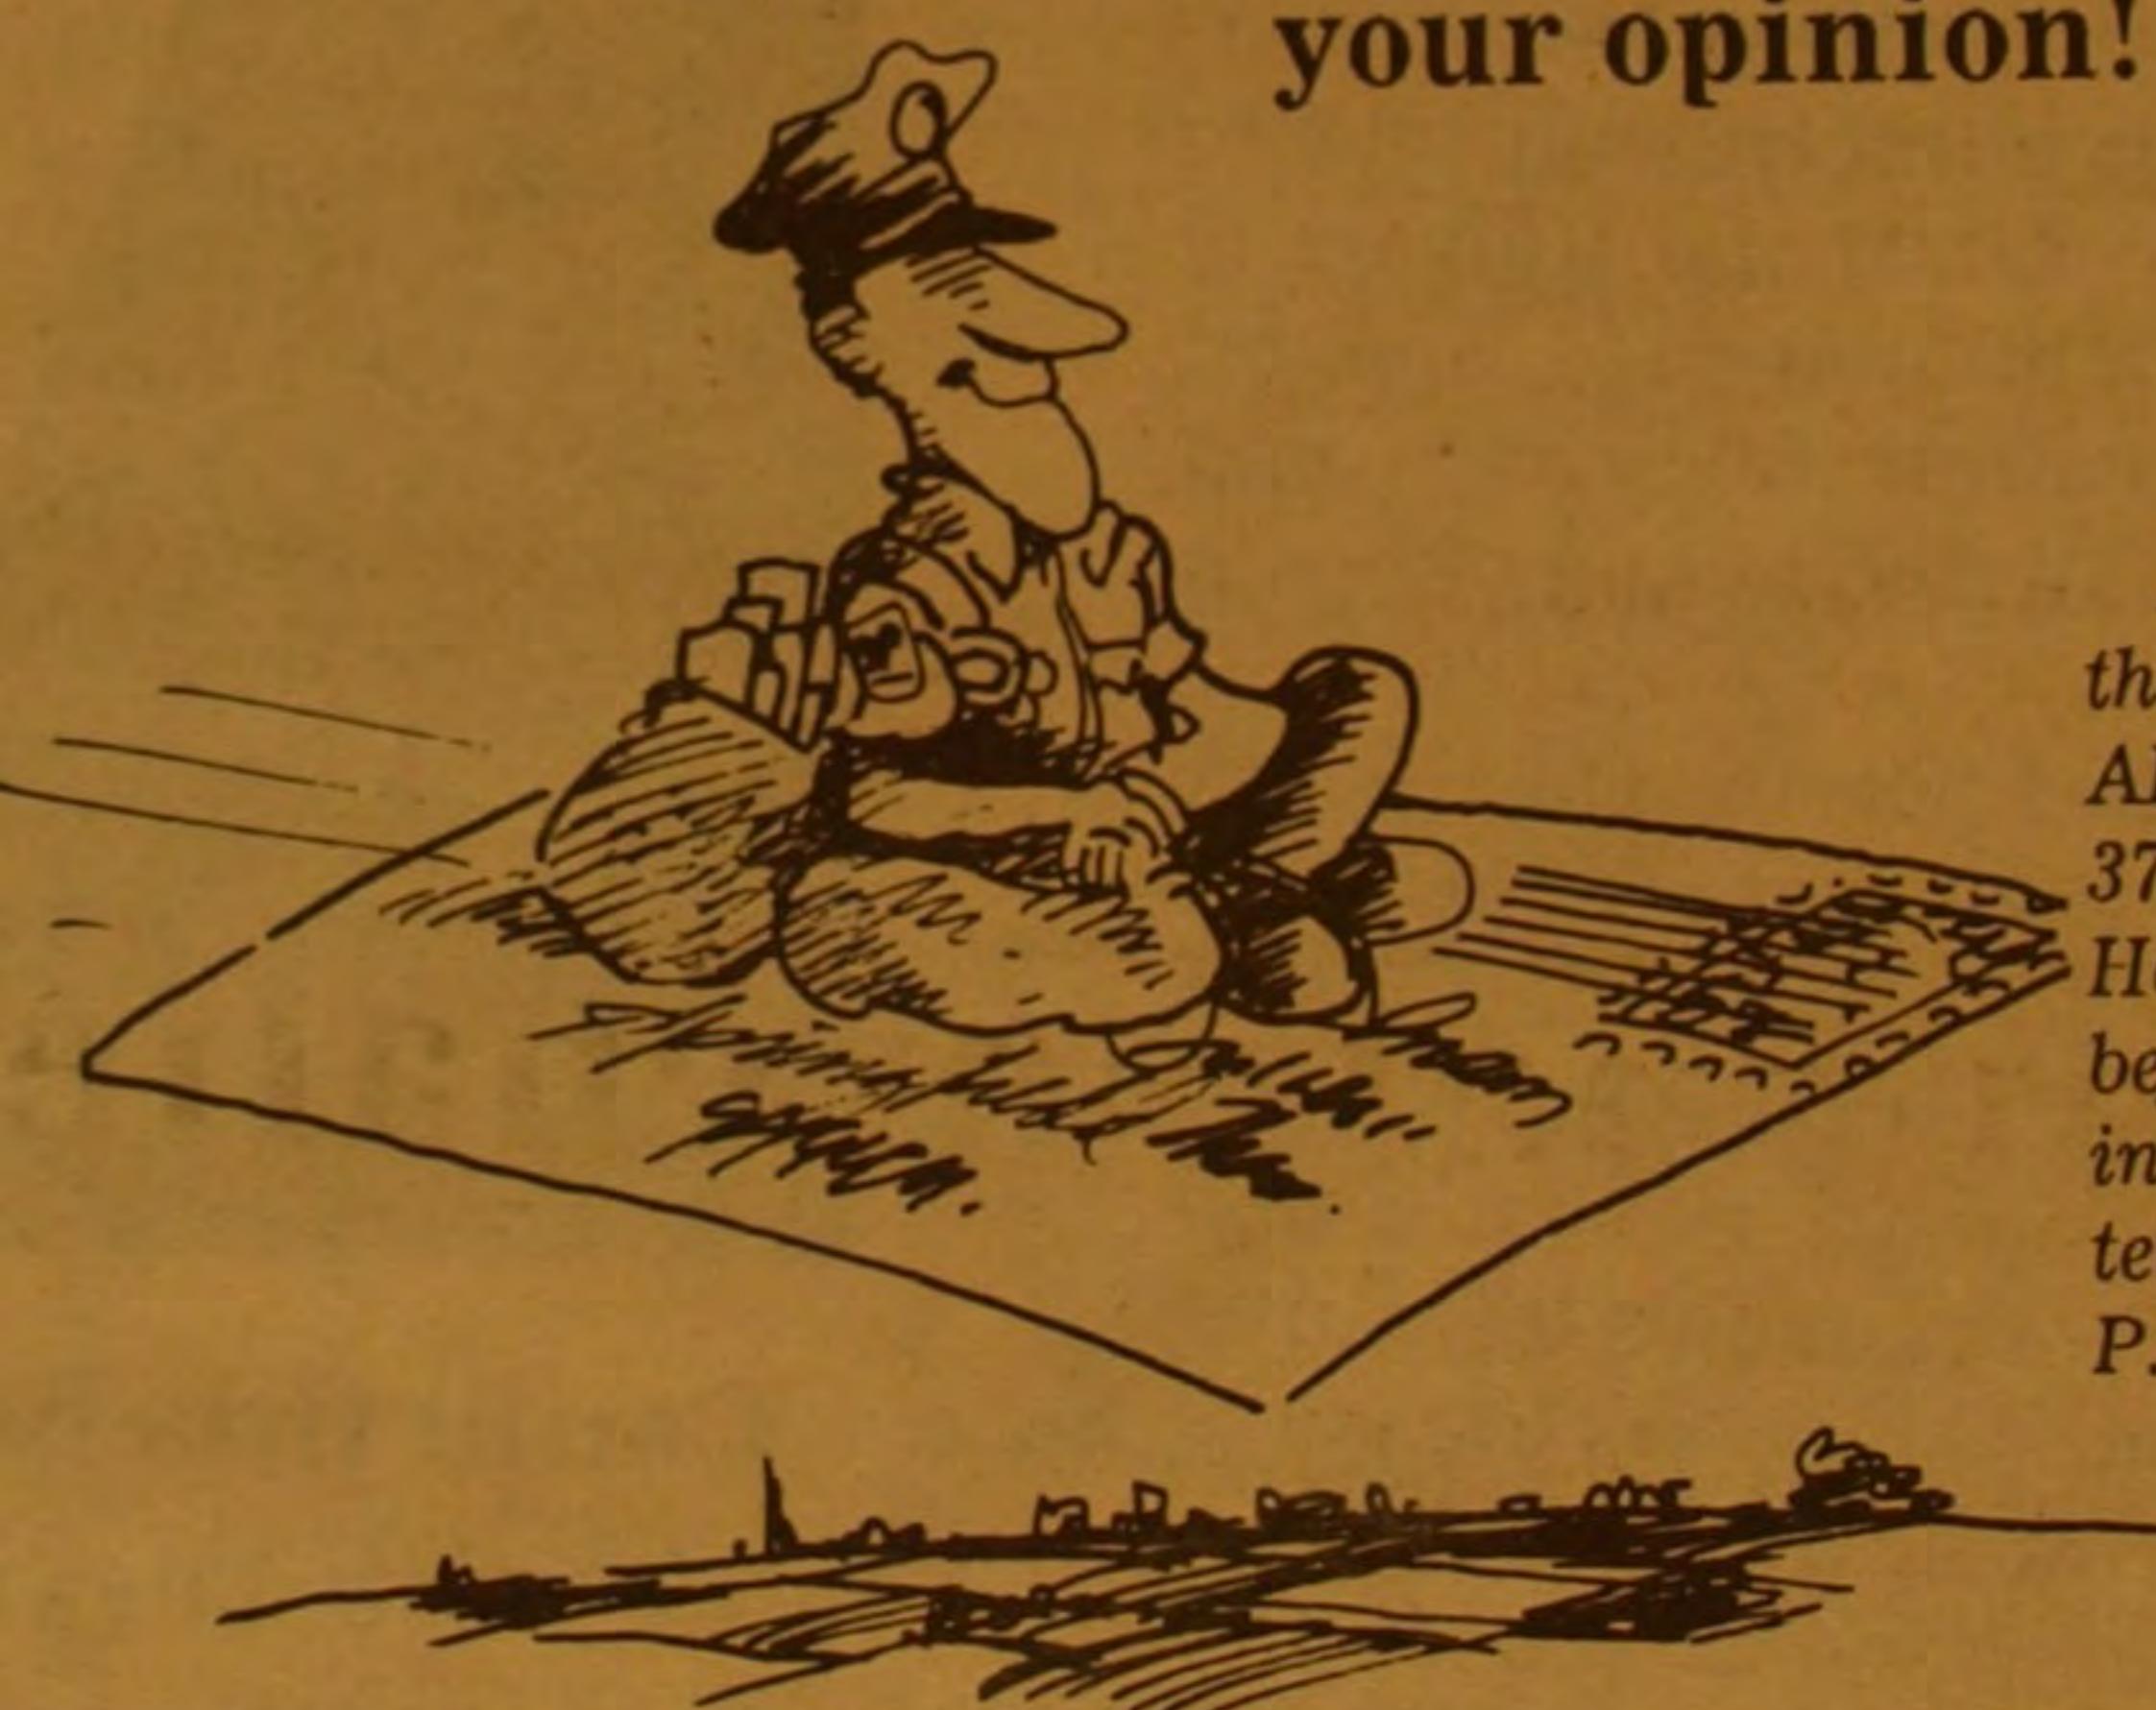

To the Editor:

On Thursday, April 19, the student government amended the "new" rules for run-off elections to have voting on both Wednesday and Thursday. This action was taken after much debate in the entire student body. This action will enable nursing students who have all day, off-campus clinics to cast their vote for the candidate of their choice. It also allows for students that only attend classes on Tuesday and Thursday to vote. I urge all students that may have never voted because they couldn't or because they felt that SGA was not for them, to cast their vote on either Wednesday, April 25 from 9:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m., or Thursday, April 26 from 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. All students that pay fees and tuition should have the right to vote and thanks to a small majority in the Senate, now they can.

Sincerely,

Colleen Wolfe Borum

Govs lose third straight in offensive showdown

By JIMMY TRODGLEN
sports editor

It was your typical Austin Peay-Western Kentucky matchup as the two teams combined for 33 hits and 17 runs, but in the end it was the Hilltoppers who had the better half of the runs and hits.

Western Kentucky handed the Governors their third straight set back with a 12-10 win at Governors Park Monday. Senior right-hander Jesse Cash took the loss as the Governors fell to 25-17. Cash, who had won his last two decisions, fell to 4-6. Hilltoppers' pitcher Neil Corley picked up the win improving to 3-2.

"They're forever games," Austin Peay assistant coach Brian Hetland said. "Both teams have good pitching, and they (Western Kentucky) were throwing some of their best pitchers at us and we hit the ball."

"We couldn't hold them down, and they came back. We let them back in the game. We had a one run lead on an 0-2 pitch and that next pitch killed us. We've got to get over those 0-2 situations with our pitchers."

Austin Peay, who had won six straight games, and 12 of its last 14, opened up the weekend with a 7-4 win over Wright State. Game two of Saturday's doubleheader was suspended with a 6-6 tie because of darkness and concluded Sunday. The Raiders used 10 innings to down APSU 8-6 and captured the second game played Sunday 6-5 in 10 innings.

"We hate to lose, but the main thing is we're playing good baseball," Hetland said. "I'd rather lose the close games like we have than to get crushed. These aren't conference games and if you do lose them you need to learn from them, and we have been able to this season."

Austin Peay jumped to a 1-0 lead after the first inning, but the Hilltoppers scored six runs over the next three innings and chased freshman right-hander Matt Block out of the game. Block had control trouble walking five over 2 1/3 innings. The Governors did answer by scoring four runs in the fourth inning which was highlighted by Ken Hatfield's two run home run.

During the next four innings both teams battled back-and-fourth and the Governors regained the lead 7-6 in the sixth inning. Thomas Coates scored on Todd Hinterser's sacrifice RBI giving APSU the lead. Western Kentucky reclaimed the lead using three runs in the top of the seventh inning. Wilfred Brown's two RBI double with no out made it a 8-7 ballgame, and Brown scored on Scott Fitzpatrick's RBI single.

Austin Peay came back in the bottom half of the inning scoring three runs and went up 10-9. But Western Kentucky scored two runs in the eighth and added another in the ninth to secure the win. The Governors had the go-ahead runner at the plate with two out in the bottom of the ninth, but Corley forced Jeff Brisby to fly out.

"We made the defensive plays, but we need to make them on every out on this level of competition," Hetland said. "The good thing about baseball is that there is a tomorrow and we need to keep our heads up and keep playing with the intensity we have had."

The Governors have a busy weekend playing Kentucky on Tuesday, Louisville Wednesday, David Lipscomb Thursday, and Middle Tennessee in a three game series this weekend in Murfreesboro. The Governors will be on the road till May 1.

"We've played to this point and now we have Middle Tennessee and that's what we live for," Hetland said. "They've got a great team, and we will need to have a big crowd there to help us."

IN BEFORE THE TAG—Austin Peay first baseman Chris Polk waits for the ball as Wright State's Brian Spears dives back safely into first base.

Govs look ahead to MTSU series

By JIMMY TRODGLEN
sports editor

It's the series everybody looks forward to, and this weekend Austin Peay's season rest in the balance of the final results.

The Governors will travel to Murfreesboro to face Middle Tennessee in a three-game conference series. The Blue Raiders swept Tennessee Tech this past weekend and improved to an unblemished 11-0 OVC mark. Austin Peay enters the series with a 4-4 conference mark, and rests in fourth place in the conference.

With only the top four teams advancing into the conference tournament and with a three-game homestand with Tennessee Tech to close out the conference, this series has more riding on it than the natural rivalry between the Clarksville and Murfreesboro schools. Austin Peay's three games with Murray State will not be replayed meaning there were at least two wins taken from the Governors, and a final game with Tennessee State was cancelled due to rain. That's four OVC games, and three probable wins taken from APSU.

Middle Tennessee's sweep over Tennessee Tech worked in the Governors' favor. TTU was a half game behind Austin Peay in the OVC standings with a 3-5 record. If the Eagles had won the series with MTSU the Governors would have fallen out of the top four.

Sports journalism challenges writer's creativity

By JEFF WHITE
assistant sports editor

If you've ever teased someone about watching a soap opera, think twice before doing it again if you're a faithful follower of a losing team in the sports section of your favorite newspaper.

How exciting could it be to read the same losing story week after week after week? How much more exciting, or difficult, would it be to author this same story each week, trying to breathe life into the redundant plot and ending?

Sportswriters often face this unenviable task.

When local sportswriter Jim Rudloff arrived from the Cleveland, Ohio, area for his position with the Leaf-Chronicle, one of his first chores was to cover Austin Peay football.

And a chore it was covering one of the most frustrating years of football at the Peay in 1989.

"It made it very difficult week to week," Rudloff said. "It was almost the same story each week."

Each Saturday the Govs produced a valiant effort, and each Saturday the result was the same. There were some overmatches, some close calls and some tough breaks, but the Govs always ended up on the short end.

While the few remaining loyal fans had to painfully endure the landslide of losses, Rudloff, new to the area, was slow to develop a gut feeling for the Govs.

"All I could do was report the way it was, and try to bring a little life to the story," he said.

Bringing life to the same old story week after week can really test a sportswriter's writing and interviewing creativity.

Over the course of a winless season, it gets pretty tough not to point fingers and care must be taken when writing an opinionated column.

"Be fair and they've got nothing to complain about," Rudloff said.

The sports journalist must also be tactful when interviewing the same coach on a regular basis, discussing the same results, problems and issues.

"As a beat writer, you can't let the well run dry," Rudloff said. "You have to be a bit of a diplomat."

Of course, above all, the most important factor is the readership. And the number of sports section readers is growing.

"Slowly but surely, newspapers are realizing the sports section draws a lot of readers," Rudloff said.

Rudloff, an experienced straight news writer in addition to sports, feels straight news does, and should, come first.

"Sports doesn't appeal to everyone," he said.

And news is where the fate of the sports section lies.

"Newspeople are management people. The first thing sacrificed is sports," Rudloff said.

Yet, with sports ever increasing role in our society, the big sports story is sometimes cross-referenced with hard news.

The recent front page news of Pete Rose's predicament is a display of the magnitude of the sports world and its figures.

Hard stories like these give increasing credibility to sports journalism and the journalists themselves.

"Sports journalism still carries the stigma of not being 'real' journalism, but it's drawing more and more strong journalists into the field," Rudloff said.

This is the second in a series of stories addressing the role of the sports journalist.

Kelly lures top recruits to Austin Peay

By JOE WILSON

sports writer

The last shot has been taken and the final buzzer has sounded for the basketball season this year, and now the real war has begun—the recruiting war.

Austin Peay basketball coach Lake Kelly has signed seven recruits, four of which have been announced already. Leading the list of signees is 6-foot-10, 235-pound Bashir Ahmad of Independence Community College.

"He is a great kid who can run the floor and shoot from the perimeter," assistant basketball coach Rick Stansbury said. "He averaged about 15 points a game last year. It was real important to get a big guy who could shoot and run the floor."

Another recruit signed by Austin Peay is Antonio Bowen. Bowen, a 6-7, 220-pound forward from Memphis, averaged 24 points and 11 rebounds per game last year at Memphis Carver High School.

"He can score inside or outside," Stansbury said. "He was ranked as the third best player in Memphis last year. He'll play the number three spot for us next year."

Both Bowen and Ahmad were signed during the early signing period last fall, and during the past two weeks the Governors coaching staff have been busy signing two guards from the state of Michigan—Toine Murphy and Jason Otter.

Murphy, a 6-5, 188-pound guard-forward from Detroit, averaged 19 points, eight rebounds and five assists a game last season for Oakland Community College in Union Lake, Mich.

Kelly recruited Murphy for his outside shooting ability.

Otter averaged 21 points and seven assists per game at Merrill High School in Merrill, Mich. He led the school to a 16-8 record last season, and was named first team All-Region and honorable mention All-State.

The coaches believe that Otter is a sleeper with a load of talent.

"Jason has the whole guard package. He is an extraordinary ball handler and an excellent passer," Kelly said. "He also shoots the ball well from the outside."

Otter chose Austin Peay over Cleveland State.

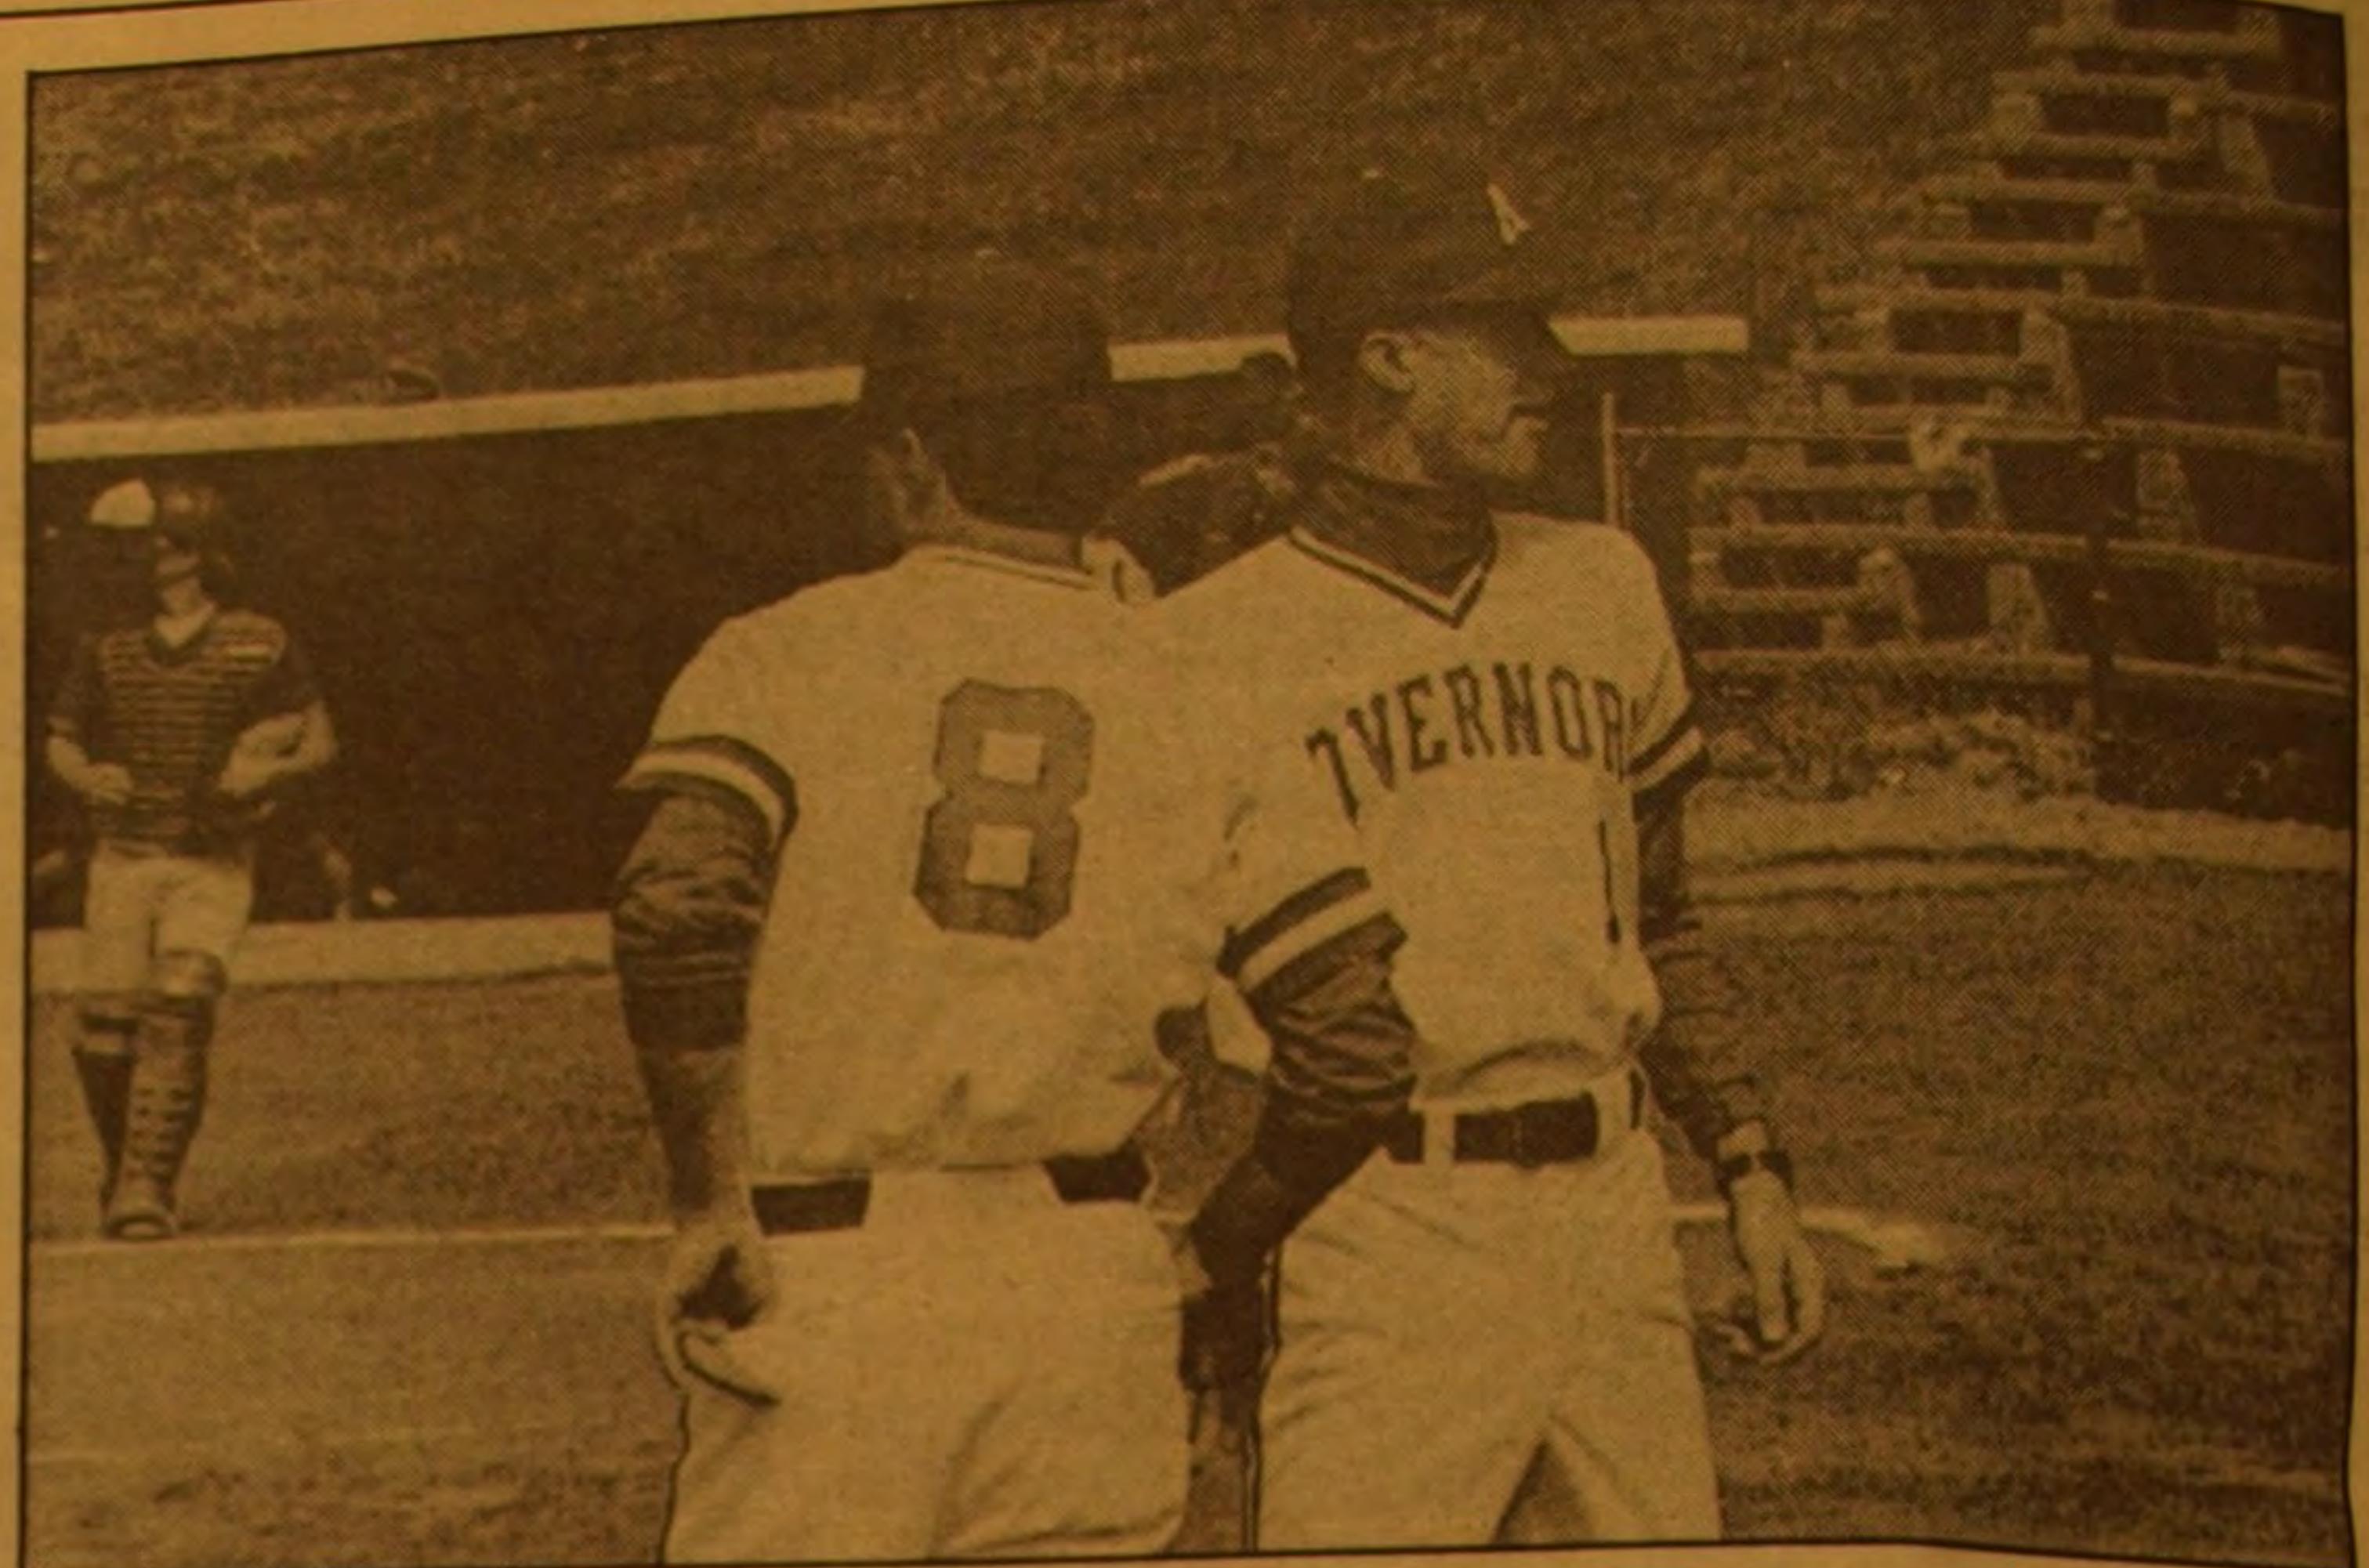

Better news is expected out of the basketball offices this week. Coach Stansbury said three more names would be released as being signed as soon as the papers arrived. With the arrival of these players plus the return most of this year's team, Austin Peay is hoping to improve on last year's 10-19 record.

"Toine (Murphy) first of all is a shooter, a fine outside shooter," Stansbury said. "He shot an impressive 49 percent from three point territory last season, 54 percent from the field and 82 percent from the free throw line."

Kelly also said that Murphy is a good passer and will probably play a wing position next season.

"He's a team oriented player and won't have to make any real adjustments to our program," Kelly said.

Murphy is also an Academic All-American and is a candidate for Austin Peay's Emerging Leaders Program. The battle for Murphy was won over Arkansas-Little Rock, Lamar, Colorado State and Butler.

THE DECISION MAKERS—Austin Peay coaches Brian Hetland (8), and Gary McClure will take the Governors into a three game series with Middle Tennessee this weekend in Murfreesboro. The Governors are in fourth place heading into the OVC series with the Blue Raiders.

Governors heading to MTSU

Now the Eagles are 3-8 and are in trouble of not making the tournament.

Despite dropping the last three games Austin Peay is still doing the things that got them this far. Hitting, pitching and defense are the reasons Austin Peay has chalked up 25 wins.

The Governors won four of five games played with Middle Tennessee last year, and the Blue Raiders will be looking for revenge, but the Governors aren't worried.

"We're going to Middle thinking we can win," Austin Peay assistant coach Brian Hetland said. "We're pumped and we know we can play with them. We feel good about this weekend."

After a medical leave since February, Austin Peay head baseball coach Gary McClure returned to the job this past week.

McClure has been instrumental in rebuilding the Governors' program using a combination of junior college and prep standouts. Austin Peay plays an aggressive style of baseball using speed on the bases, and power at the plate. Two of McClure's philosophies toward the game.

The Governors are batting .316 as a team and have stolen 82 bases in 111 attempts. The most stolen bases in a season record was set last year when APSU stole 151 bases. Austin Peay's current .316 batting average, is eight points below the single-season record established in 1976. Last year APSU set a record for most hits in a season with 516. After 42 games this year Austin Peay has 425 hits, an average of 10.11 per game, and are within reach of breaking last year's mark.

Freshman shortstop Scott Quade has wasted little time in establishing himself as a defensive standout. His presence, along with third baseman Marc Thomas, the most improved player this season, have produced an impressive defensive core on the left side of the infield.

Leaders program inspires student to volunteer

By KATHLEEN DERMER
staff writer

Deborah Mallory is an energetic, soft-spoken freshman who enjoys school, participating in the Emerging Leaders Program and volunteering.

As part of the Emerging Leaders Program at Austin Peay State University, Mallory is required to complete 40 hours of volunteer work within the community. "It allows us to develop our leadership skills in the community, and it also allows us to grow as a person and learn different things about the community and people," Mallory said.

Mallory volunteers as a teachers' aid at Moore Elementary School in Clarksville. "I assist the children with problems they have on their work," she said. Mallory assists the 4th and 5th grade teachers for about five hours a week.

What made her choose this type of volunteer work? "I started thinking about what to do (as a volunteer), and I remembered my mother worked at Moore School as a teacher's aid," Mallory said. Her love of children was the deciding factor. "I get satisfaction that comes with knowing that I've helped a child learn something."

Mallory has worked for most of the semester and is a full-time student. Finding the time to volunteer has proved easy for her, none-the-less. "I looked at my schedule, and I just fit in the hours," Mallory said.

Mallory said she gets enjoyment and gratification from her volunteer work. "The joy and satisfaction I get from helping people. That's my main strength. I love to know that I've helped someone accomplish something."

She finds she really enjoys participating in the Emerging Leaders Program, because it develops her leadership style and skills. By volunteering, she is making a leadership decision.

She doesn't believe someone can't find the time to volunteer. "There are many different ways to do volunteer work, and it doesn't have to take a lot of time, if you concentrate on your schedule. By doing a little volunteer work here and there, it adds up to a lot in the long run," Mallory said.

"You don't need experience to volunteer. On the most part, it comes from will and the heart," Mallory said.

This is the final story in a series on student volunteers.

Spanish tragedy opens, closes AP Playhouse's season

Austin Peay State University's AP Playhouse season finale, "The House of Bernarda Alba," will bring to the stage a relatively young cast, as six of the 10 characters are portrayed by freshmen and sophmores.

Cast in the title role of Bernarda is sophomore Lori Wooton Reda. The five daughters are played by freshman Danielle Blackman, Adela; Cheryl Hunter, Martirio; Camille Reese, Magdalena; sophomore Margaret Elaine Price, Amelia and senior Traci Childress, Angustius.

Stephanie Coates, a graduate student, is seen as Rosa, the maid; sophomore John Scaife is the grandmother Maria Josefina; Mayisa Cisneros, junior, plays La Poncia, the housekeeper and senior Samuel Whited III portrays the aunt, Prudencia.

For reservations and/or information about "The House of Bernarda Alba," telephone the APSU Theatre Box Office at (615) 648-7379 between the hours of 2-6 p.m.

Considered by most critics to be the greatest modern Spanish tragedy, the story tells of the recently widowed Bernarda and her obsession with the family honor as she forces her five daughters into a period of cloistered mourning which leads to a tragic climax. The show is directed by Artist-in-Residence Ron Foreman.

Sponsored by the APSU Center for the Creative Arts and the AP Playhouse, performances are at 8 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday, April 25-28, with a 2 p.m. matinee on Sunday, April 29. General admission is $4, while tickets for students/senior citizens are $2.

Food services adopt paper to aid in recycling

By MARY KEEL
features editor

There is something different in Austin Peay State University's Gov's Grill and Harvill Cafeteria. It is not the workers or the food. It is what the food is being served on. As of Monday, April 16, the APSU food services has changed from using styrofoam products to paper ones in an effort to help protect the environment.

According to Diana Tidwell of food services, the change is something they, in their department, have wanted to do for some time. The problem was with the expense and red-tape of changing over. "It took us a long time to make the decision, but company's are starting to do it and I thought we needed to be right along there with them," Tidwell said.

Tidwell went on to explain that styrofoam is a non-biodegradable product, meaning that it will not decompose. Once it is dumped into a landfill, it will stay there indefinitely. She said the environment has always been a major concern of hers, and she is glad the university is starting to do something to promote its care.

The decision to convert to the more environmentally safe product was not one made solely by Tidwell. She said she met with Ron Harner, director of food services, and Fred Heavenside, food services district manager, and discussed the possibility for some time. They finally agreed to the change and implemented it last week.

"We wanted the students to be aware of the change, and why we did it. Some people are not going to like it. Paper is not as sturdy, and it doesn't keep your food as hot, but it is also one of the products that does break down," Tidwell said.

Tidwell also said the price of paper is twice the price of styrofoam, but, for now, the food services do not have any plans to raise the price of its meals.
