

Dr. Oscar Page cites familiarity top priority

By LEE ELDER

Priority one for new Austin Peay State University President Dr. Oscar Page has been familiarity. Page revealed at his first press conference Friday morning at the UC ballroom that getting to know the people within the university community and the city of Clarksville that surrounds it had taken up the bulk of his time during his first five days on campus.

Page succeeds longtime APSU President Robert O. Riggs, who left the job he held for over 11 years to assume a Regents Professorship at Memphis State University. He comes to the university from Greenwood, S. C., where he served for nearly 10 years at Lander College as Vice President for Academic Affairs, Acting President and Provost during his tenure there.

The 48-year-old Bowling Green, Ky., native made no new bold statements or promises as he addressed the local media, but was quite candid when confronted with glaring issues such as the future of the university's football program, low faculty salaries, and the survival of Harned Hall.

Page defended what was probably his first key decision as president, which was to appoint former assistant head coach Paul Brewster to head the university's troubled football program to succeed Emory Hale, who resigned in December. Most observers speculate that Page alone holds the fate of the gridiron future of the university.

"I feel like I made a good decision when I made the decision at the time to promote someone on the staff if that person existed," he explained. "I made that decision because I felt personally I didn't know enough about the athletic program, didn't know much about the football program and really didn't know much about the direction the university was going with its football program, so I felt it was best to promote an assistant coach to give me decent time to analyze the program and know where we could go."

Brewster signed a one-year contract to coach the Gobs, who finished the 1987 season with a 2-9 record. Page declined to say whether or not Brewster was a permanent or temporary fixture at the head coach position.

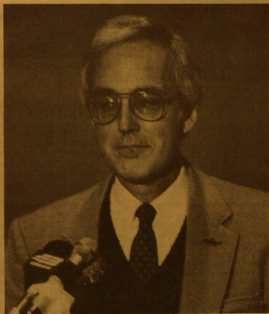

Page was also unsure if the university would be able to maintain a football program, a requirement for the athletic program as a whole to remain in the Ohio Valley Conference, although he did have hopes that the Austin Peay could remain in the OVC.

When confronted with a report that shows AP faculty salary levels trailing the state average by 15 percent, Page called the problem "a top priority."

"It is an issue that has existed on the campus and it is one of those issues that I will be working hard to address," said Page. "How I will do that I'm not sure at this point in time. It takes time to correct problems like that and I will be critically analyzing the total university budget to try and work that out."

The issue concerning Harned Hall, which is scheduled to be destroyed later this year, is something Page admits he knows little about.

"At this point in time, I know very little about this situation," Page stated. "I know where it is and have observed the outside, but I have not had an opportunity to talk with any of the people involved in the decision that has already been made."

"I'll be involved, as time will permit, in a variety of activities and I will also encourage Austin Peay to do the same thing," Page said. "You can't draw lines, we've got to be working together."

It must work both ways, according to Page.

"The university has to have a lot of private funding to carry on the kind of activities we want to maintain," he said. "The state of Tennessee provides funds for operating, but the great universities of the South are strongly supported by private gifts and we will be working very hard to increase the private support for the university."

Promoting the university both for fund-raising and enrollment purposes was a topic that wove itself into several answers by Page. Besides becoming more familiar with his new surroundings and analyzing the needs of the school, he said one of his first tasks is "to reach outside to promote the university."

Salesmanship and "a strong retention program" were stressed by Page as essential in order for the university to increase its enrollment in the future.

Page sees the university's recent designation as a liberal arts institution by the state of Tennessee as

Adams departs to enjoy leisure of retirement

By JEANA MCCOLLUGH

Aileen Adams, a long-time member of the APSU staff, is retiring from her post as secretary to Dr. James Schellhammer, dean of admissions, effective this month.

"I will miss being here," said Adams. "It was a wonderful experience and I have beautiful memories."

Adams has many memories of the progressive strides the University has made in recent years.

In 1968, Adams was hired by Austin Peay to be secretary to Dr. J. Milton Henry, a professor of history. At the time, she recalls, Dr. Henry was writing a historical book for the Tennessee Valley Authority on the Land Between the Rivers, later known as the Land Between the Lakes. Her job was to type the literary work.

"Dr. Henry was nice and patient," said Adams. She is especially proud of Dr. Henry's acknowledgement of her in that book.

After Dr. Henry finished the book in August 1968, Adams was interviewed and hired by Dean M. P. Bowman to become secretary to the Dean of Admissions and Records.

From then on, Adams became an integral part of Admissions and Records. She worked with three different deans including Dean Bowman, Dean Glenn S. Gentry and Dean Schellhammer.

She performed mainly secretarial work such as shorthand, typing, editing and writing letters. However, this was not her only function.

She also entered into the computer each quarter's class schedule including the times classes would meet, the professors teaching various classes and the room numbers of classes. And, she made adjustments as necessary.

Adams said, "I enjoyed working with each department chairman, and I have made a lot of friends."

Adams, who is retiring while she can "enjoy life," plans to keep busy with various activities. She commented that she will become active in her church—Cumberland Presbyterian Church—read, sew, watch some television, travel and be with her family consisting of four children all of whom attended Austin Peay, nine grandchildren, and five sisters.

She also will continue one of her favorite hobbies, doll collecting. Although at one time she had nearly 500 dolls, Adams currently has approximately 50 dolls. She was invited to display her collection Nov. 21 at Clarksville's Smith-Trahern Mansion.

Reflecting on the quality of her work at APSU and on her upcoming departure, she said, "I wanted to do my job and do it right. I am satisfied that I have."

A reception honoring Adams was held Dec. 11 at Ellington Student Services Building.

"very positive" and "not in any way a conflict with the university's professional programs."

"I think it gives us a point of distinction," he said. "The basic concept of the liberal arts concept is to teach people how to solve problems in a variety of ways. It ingrains into the individual the understanding of how to solve a problem or analyze a situation. In the context of a liberal arts institution we can produce outstanding graduates in all of our professional programs, because they are exposed to ideas that they may not be exposed to in strictly a professional setting."

The biggest challenge that Page believes lies in front of the university as it prepares to make the transition from a quarter to a semester system is informing the student body how it will affect them and assuring them that they will not lose credit for their work. He said that he has worked under various systems and prefers semesters.

Page graduated from Western Kentucky University in 1962 with a B.A. in history. He obtained both his master's and his doctorate in history from the University of Kentucky in 1963 and 1967, respectively.

He and his wife Linda reside on Dunbar Cave Road with their son Matthew, 16. The couple's oldest child, Kristen, 19, is a sophomore at Furman.

Hoehn honored with theorem

Dr. Larry Hoehn, professor of mathematics and computer science, has been honored by having a theorem named after him. Dr. Hoehn discovered the Hoehn-Niven theorem in 1983.

After being modified by Ivan Niven of the University of Oregon, the theorem was published in 1985. It deals with the behavior of the classical means when data are uniformly increased.

Two articles on the theorem were recently printed in the Journal of Mathematics Analysis and Applications.

Crews joins health center

Dr. Robert Thornton Crews, associate professor of biology, was recently appointed to the Middle Tennessee Area Health Education Center. MTAHEC works toward cooperation and coordination between communities and educational institutions in health professions.

Dr. Crews currently directs Austin Peay's recently accredited medical technology program. He will serve a three-year term with MTAHEC.

Smith gets CPR award

Dorothy Smith, assistant professor of health and physical education, recently was named Basic Life Support Affiliate Faculty from the American Heart Association's Tennessee Affiliate. Smith has received the award for five consecutive years.

Smith, who earned both a bachelor's and master's degree from Austin Peay, has trained over 2,200 people in cardiopulmonary resuscitation.

Harvill Hall lounge opened

Non-traditional students have a new place to relax or study on campus. The ground-level lounge in Harvill Hall has been converted to a new lounge designed especially for non-traditional students at Austin Peay.

The lounge will be open from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., Monday through Friday. The purpose of the lounge is for relaxing, studying, visiting with friends and meeting new students.

Facilities provided include a study area, restrooms, lockers, a kitchen area and vending machines.

According to Barbara Phillips, associate dean of students, the lounge is sponsored by the division of student affairs. For the first month the lounge is open, free coffee, tea, and cocoa will be provided to non-traditional students.

"We define non-traditional students as those students who did not begin their collegiate experience immediately after high school, married students, students with children, and transfer students," said Ms. Phillips.

If you would like more information on the lounge, contact Ms. Phillips at 648-7341.

Playhouse auditions set

The AP Playhouse will conduct auditions for its production of "Arsenic and Old Lace" Thursday and Friday at 7 p.m. in the Travern Theatre. The cast includes three female and 11 male characters.

John Griffin, associate professor of theatre, will direct the 1942 comedy by Joseph Kesselring. Students, faculty and community members are encouraged to audition. The play will be presented Feb. 24-27 at 8 p.m. and Feb. 28 at 2 p.m.

Filippo gets theatre award

Dr. I. Joe Filippo, Professor of speech, communication, and theatre, was honored at the recent conference of the Tennessee Theatre Association.

He was presented the Distinguished Service Award dedicated support of theatre in the state and for his outstanding service to the Tennessee Theatre Association.

Pazulski gets scholarship

The Watkins/Northington Scholarship was presented to Lou Pazulski this quarter. Pazulski is a sophomore majoring in advertising. The monetary award is presented to a qualified student pursuing a degree in art. It is designed to assist in purchasing art supplies.

The scholarship is made possible by Choe Northington of Clarksville.

Flautists to perform

The department of music and Center for the Creative Arts at APSU will present a duo flute recital Thursday, Jan. 14 at 8 p.m. in the Clement Auditorium.

Featured on the program will be Lisa Read and Jill Swetnam.

Read is assistant professor of music at Austin Peay. Swetnam teaches music at Music Tree Prep School in Covington, La., in addition to pursuing her doctoral degree at Louisiana State University. They will be performing works by Bach, Muczynski, Chopin and Doppler.

Subconscious versus new year resolutions

BY SIOBHAN KELLY

Welcome back Austin Peay students, faculty and Tarzan fans!

So how was your holiday break? I hope yours was as lazy, fruitless and blissfully recreational as mine. I tell you, there is nothing more satisfying, to me, than to visit with family and friends, drink a few glasses of holiday cheer and eat like a savage. More importantly, college was a far-away land that I could avoid without any guilt whatsoever for a wondrous few weeks.

Since this is the beginning of a new year, I'm sure that several of you sat down and wrote new year resolutions hoping to promote a beneficial change in your lives. It didn't work, did it?

The ideals the mind sets for oneself are completely different from the ideals of the subconscious.

Well that's okay, really! I've been resolving all sorts of impossible feats for years and I now have the courage to say, "Hey, I can't do all this stuff!" The ideals the mind sets for oneself are completely different from the ideals of the subconscious. Your mind can wake up and tell you that you're running three miles that morning and cutting up your credit cards while the subconscious has absolutely no intention of allowing the mind to get away with such rubbish. So, the secret to successful resolving is getting to know your subconscious.

My subconscious and I sat down and reworked my new year resolutions the other day and so you know what I've discovered? I've discovered that my subconscious feels that drastic change in one's lifestyle can destroy the delicate equilibrium which controls our destiny. Destroying this delicate balance can promote several hazardous health problems associated with stress, emotional crisis and liver disorders (this is due to persons turning to alcohol in times of emotional stress). Well I certainly don't need these problems so I let my subconscious lead the way in helping me to eliminate the resolutions that were threatening to damage my equilibrium:

Stop Procrastinating—My subconscious says procrastination is very helpful in eliminating stress due to severe pressure to complete assignments on time, keeping those grades up to par and taking Math 115. It is better to put a task off for a while than to overload yourself.

Be Nicer To People—Hypocrisy stinks," says my subconscious. "Don't go out of your way to be cordial with someone if you can't stand them."

Happy New Year!

Besides, why ruin my reputation?

Get into Shape—Exercise and a balanced diet are great ideas but improbable for a college student, says my subconscious. Who has time to study and exercise?

Change My Image—My subconscious feels that this is similar to getting in shape. Who has the time? It's also very stressful trying to decide what to change, how to change it, etc.

Stop Partying on School Nights—"Look," says my subconscious, "every night is a school night. In order to successfully maintain your GPA, you must plan for recreation time to relieve some of that tension." Makes sense to me.

Insure My Car—"Well, you haven't been hit yet, right?" laughed my subconscious. I'm still considering this matter.

Stop Throwing Tantrums—"Releasing anger makes for great mental stability," urges my subconscious. Besides, I'm very good at it.

Spend Money More Wisely—"Hey," says the subconscious, "do you know anyone who does? Either you spend money or you're a miser. You're only human, kid so give yourself a break."

Stop Overreacting—There is nothing wrong with being careful," my subconscious tells me. "Overreacting is simply your way of making sure all is going well and preventing any more mistakes from occurring and bringing more stress into your life."

Try to Help Others—"My Lord you're naive," my subconscious groaned. "You're not going to get

I've discovered that my subconscious feels that drastic change in one's lifestyle can destroy the delicate equilibrium which controls our destiny.

anywhere in this world by helping others! Get with it! I suppose you think Connie Chung made it to the top by helping others!"

Stop Being So Stubborn—I really thought I had my subconscious stumped on this one, but I was wrong. "Being stubborn is your way of defending your rights, your ideas, your morals," it said vehemently. "Do you want people to walk all over you?" No, I suppose I don't.

Well, before this becomes redundant, I would like you to know that my subconscious only allowed me to leave two resolutions unchanged. One is taking immediate action on career matters, such as sprucing up my resume and the second is letting my hair grow long. So I figure that when I do get my resume together, Crystal Gayle and I will have something in common.

Noise pollution bothers student

Why are we subjected to this pollution no matter where we are? Standing on a street corner, waiting for the traffic light to change, you experience this. Going from class to class on campus, it happens. Trying to avoid those slippery patches of ice and snow that Ma Nature gave us, and you inherit some hard-of-hearing cash driving by with his car windows down, and his radio turned up so high that people on the back side of Nashville can tell what the station is playing.

Parks are no exception. One can't go there to relax any more. The airwaves are taken up by dueling Magnavoxes played to their limits by a pair of self-styled "Joe Cools" or whatever! What happened to simply listening to your music, instead of everyone in the area listening whether they want to or not.

It has been said that there are noise pollution laws that govern this.

I believe that it's high time we lobbied to get these laws enforced. In some European countries local law enforcement officials simply confiscate these "boom boxes" that cause the disturbances and they are never seen again.

All State needs you

All State Readers:

Does it concern you? Well, it depends on your point of view. Complaints have been aired about the 12-page format of our school paper. Do you want a larger more comprehensive paper?

What you probably don't realize is that this paper is funded solely through revenues brought in by advertisers.

Lately I have heard from a lot of "potential" advertisers that they are not interested in buying an ad because our readers don't pay any attention to them.

I don't believe this is true...but we,

Here's another peeve...folks in apartments or dorms, who do the same thing. How many of the readers of this article can say they have never experienced the floors and walls vibrating from a neighbor's stereo system that's turned up so loud that dwellers in the next county can dance to the music?

The guilty parties must be made to realize that after a certain decibel level, no matter who is doing the singing or playing, whether it's Luciano Pavarotti or Cindi Lauper or even the Mormon Tabernacle Choir, it is still noise. Have a little respect for your fellow man, turn it down just a little, please.

You may find that the so-called "music" you listened to at 100 decibels actually may be music when played at 15 to 20 decibels, and you can probably get to enjoy it more at the same time.

A concerned student,

the advertising staff of the All State, need your support. Ask for your DISCOUNTS and let our advertisers know you appreciate their support of our paper, use their coupons!!

To those of you who don't care...take a minute and think. The coverage of APSU events and personalities is dependent on our advertising dollars. This paper is the only place that brings the news of APSU to you from the perspective of a student.

What did and didn't happen in sports circles

By ERIK MYKLEBOST

The last of 1987 and the start of '88 have seen good and bad things happen locally and nationally. AP's gridders didn't fare so well this past season, but individual efforts did not go unnoticed. Sammy Gholston shocked the University of Cincinnati with his 300 plus yardage. Roy Berkemeier made the 1987 All-OVC team. Congratulations, Roy!

Several other players get nods of approval as well. Reid Barr missed being top punter by only 0.7 of a yard. Tom McMillan got a sixth place ranking for booting field goals and extra points.

Coach Emory Hale resigned. I, for one, will definitely miss the man around campus. His spot has been taken by assistant coach Paul Brewster. We have a long wait to see how this move turns out.

I had the opportunity to go to the Cotton Bowl game New Year's Day in Dallas. Bringing their Heisman Trophy winner, Tim Brown, to Dallas was the most exciting thing Notre Dame's Irish did all day. The Govs' Mike Lewis does much better than Brown's Cotton Bowl performance on his off days!

All the folks watching the big leaguers play cannot, for the life of them, figure out who is going to the Super Bowl this year. Seattle has a fear of getting past the first round. New Orleans should have but didn't; Minnesota shouldn't have but did, even to the point of dumping San Francisco and Joe Montana by the wayside. Houston thought it had a chance to go all the way, but it didn't. And give up on Chicago! Washington, Cleveland, Denver and Minnesota are the final four.

Meanwhile, the question floating around "America's Team" is where will Tony Dorsett be playing in 1988?

To flip over to the volleyball side of things, a well-deserved pat on the back goes to Connie Caldwell for making All-OVC again. A great finish to a great career, Connie!

The Gov basketballers finally come back to the Dunn Center this coming weekend. The men's team have played here only twice all season, the last time on Nov. 28.

Barry Sumpter gained MVP of the Wendy's Classic held at Bowling Green, Ky., in December. Good job, Barry!

Acme Boot Co. of Clarksville has announced it will sponsor a major college basketball tournament in Clarksville in December 1988.

Mike Vogel, senior vice president of sales and marketing, said, "The Acme family is proud and excited to expand our community involvement by helping to bring Clarksville and the surrounding area a sports event of this caliber. We plan to attract teams of national prominence and build this into a premier tournament."

Lady Govs have hopes for a successful season

By ERIK MYKLEBOST

The Lady Govs basketball team have been asserting themselves well on the courts coming into this year's Ohio Valley Conference play.

Starting their pre-season play with a win over Ft. Campbell, 82-51, and a Vol State scrimmage, 75-61, which may count according to NCAA rules. It seems the weather is helping the cause a bit as 25 games are required for a season and the snow is cancelling a few games that would ordinarily count.

The women also downed Southern Indiana University, 81-74, and had a real thriller against the University of Evansville. This game went into three overtimes before the Lady Govs, led by Shandra Maxwell and Rachel Hyatt, iced the win with a 105-103 effort.

Coach Marvin Williams is really excited about the coming OVC season. He doesn't expect to lead the pack; just stay in the top four rankings. But, "Anything can happen. Anything's possible," he said.

Marvin Williams

"We have three positions on the squad that have first quality players. The others are coming along real well also. By 1989, we could be a real OVC contender," Williams said.

Shandra Maxwell has been extremely impressive in pre-season play. She's ranking third in the nation in scoring, and fifth nationally in field goal percentages.

As for the OVC outlook—they beat Evansville who beat Murray State; UT-Chattanooga beat Vandy by one point. So, there are possibilities floating all over, but it will be a "wait and see" season. The next home game for the Lady Govs is Morehead State on January 16 at 5 p.m. and Eastern Kentucky on January 18 at 5 p.m. The Lady Govs are leading the way for the mens team playing at 7:30 p.m. on the same days.

Tired of being "Road Warriors" Governors finally come home

By ERIK MYKLEBOST

I finally caught Coach Lake Kelly at his office this a.m. and got a few answers before he had to leave town again.

When asked about his version of the "Road Warriors," his reply was, "Rough, to put it mildly. The schedule we had hurt us in that we were so busy travelling that there was no time to get any decent practices in."

"Oklahoma is capable of being the number one team in the country, Illinois is no slouch either. Our squad put in an excellent effort against Providence. We came out a little slow in the 2nd half, and allowed them an opportunity to run some points on us that we couldn't quite get back, as the 105-99 final score will indicate!" Coach Kelly said.

There are no noticeable player problems, all things are progressing well. The second string insiders-Javin Johnson, Barry Howard, and Myron Devoe are making themselves known on the boards.

Kelly's predictions for OVC play? Well, Murray State and Morehead State are stronger. "It should be a real dogfight in the conference. It's anybody's guess as to the outcome of the coming season."

Coach Kelly feels that the player to watch is Keith Rawls. He feels sure that the man will break out soon and be a player to contend with.

Paul Brewster has been named head football coach for Austin Peay State University's Governors. He's the 12th head coach in the 51-year history of the school's football program. He succeeds long-time friend Emory Hale, who recently resigned the position.

Brewster said of his appointment, "It is a great thrill for me to be given the opportunity to head the Governor football program. I have been around the game for a long time and will now have the opportunity to do some things that I always wanted to try."

His appointment became official Jan. 1.

Soccer, a reasonably new sport around the Clarksville area, has generated interest among a few of us on campus. Doe Podurgal and I are interested in seeing just how many of you would be interested in joining a club team on campus to play in a league in the spring. An organizational meeting will be held Thursday, Jan. 14, at 6 p.m. in Room 282 of the Dunn Center.

Drew Simmons, director of intramurals, reminds all team captains that there will be a meeting at 6 p.m. today at the recreation complex. There will be an officials' clinic following the meeting.

A racquetball tournament is scheduled for Feb. 22. Sign-ups are from Feb. 10 through Feb. 17.

Intramural activities for the winter quarter will kick off today with the men's and women's basketball seasons.

Aerobics goes on year round.

Malone leaves university with good memories

Henry Malone feels fortunate to have had the opportunity to work in the same area where he grew up.

Malone, a Guthrie, Ky., resident, has been an Austin Peay State University administrator since 1965, but on Dec. 31 he retired. He was coordinator of public service in the APSU College of Education.

The APSU alumnus received his master's degree from George Peabody in 1951 while teaching at a public school in Lewis County. He had the chance to come home later that same year when he accepted the principal's position at Guthrie High School.

"I had been away for awhile...since high school," Malone said. "I had been at Lewis County, in the service and also at college. I felt pretty good about going back. I didn't know most of the students, but I knew a lot of their parents. It was a real nice experience. I was principal for seven years."

"Guthrie at one time was a thriving community. Of course now everything in this area centers around Clarksville. As a kid I remember working on the trains and selling popcorn. It was a great town to grow up in. I felt real fortunate to stay in this area. Many of my friends had to move away because of their work."

He became superintendent of Todd County Schools in 1958 and served in that capacity until 1965. During his tenure the high schools were consolidated and Todd County Central became the only secondary school in the county.

However, Malone realized his dream was to return to Austin Peay, and this became a reality in 1965 when he accepted the position as assistant director of field services.

"I enjoyed public education very much," Malone said. "It was very, very rewarding. But somehow or other I always wanted to come back to Austin Peay. I have very strong feelings about APSU. The one that is your alma mater is always close to your heart."

Working with Earl Sexton, the director of field services, Malone had to be a jack-of-all-trades as he was assigned various duties.

"In those days we did all the recruiting, handled the financial aid, did general public affairs work and alumni affairs."

He also served as director of alumni affairs, serving in this position when the office was permanently moved to the Emerald Hills Alumni Center in 1975. Being a graduate, he said, "Alumni support is essential to the growth and success of the University."

Malone believes he learned a lot from Sexton as he worked with the director until the latter's retirement in 1972.

"Earl Sexton was probably one of the most outstanding individuals. I would consider him a role model. He was probably the most influential person to me at APSU."

In 1980 he switched over to the educational department. For the last seven years Malone has served as supervisor of student teachers, coordinator of the University's off-campus program, and teacher of a graduate-level education class during the winter and summer quarters.

"I worked closely with the students when I supervised student teaching," Malone said as he explained his long list of duties for the last seven years. "When I administered the off-campus program, I worked with the county coordinators. I facilitated the mechanics of the program. I coordinated the program with the business and admissions offices and did all the public relations for the off-campus (program)."

"I enjoyed the variety of it all. Taking everything into consideration, my public education background put me in a position where I could work with students and teachers in the field."

He said he is proud to have been a part of Austin Peay's education department and believes the program has a fine reputation of producing quality teachers.

"The education department here is tremendous. The leadership Dr. (Donald) Lambert has provided has been outstanding. He is the man for the job," Malone said about the chairman of the department.

While at APSU, Malone has been active in Beta Beta Beta, Phi Delta Kappa and numerous education associations on the state and national level. He also is a member of the Clarksville Rotary Club and serves as vice chairman of the Todd County Housing Authority.

Malone believes the time is right for him to retire as his wife Jean, postmaster of the Guthrie post office, also is nearing retirement.

"We would maybe travel a little and do some of those things we wanted to do for a long time...that we just haven't been able to do, he said."

Austin Peay ACT scores up from previous years

Results of ACT-COMP (ACT College Outcome Measures Project) testing at Austin Peay University for the 1986-87 graduating seniors indicate a gain of 16.8 raw score points. This gain score places Austin Peay fifth out of 117 senior institutions included in a nationwide sample conducted by ACT. The national average for gain of raw score points was 9.9.

Dr. Linda Rudolph, APSU testing coordinator and special assistant to the vice president for academic affairs, says she believes the gain of raw score points and national ranking is an excellent reflection of the University's academic programs.

"one day at a time" as he works in his garden and does a little hunting and fishing. However, he said he doesn't rule out the possibility of his pursuing another career.

"It's been a great experience here. There are a lot of friends and colleagues I think an awful lot of. I intend to come back here quite often."

How would Malone like to be remembered by the students, faculty and administrators of APSU? He said, "As a pretty good utility man in the sense that I've done a lot of things. I'd like to be remembered as the good utility man who served a good purpose for the team. Sort of like someone who fills in the gaps."

Guthrie is a half hour's drive from APSU, but somehow one gets the impression that Malone will always be a part of the APSU team.

STAYING AT THE CONVENT

All morning that pigeon has marched back and forth across the cold roof of the place where the nuns go to sing.

Under another roof,
and another vigilant sentinel, wine sleeps heavily malignantly
inside some men,
and makes them dream.

Elsewhere,
nuns go back and forth,
to and from prayer.

PHILIP PAUL

THE ATTIC OF MY MIND

One night I chanced a trip too high
And drifted through the attic of my mind.
I shuddered at the horrors I found lurking there
Trapped within the attic of my mind.
I found old emotions I'd never sorted out,
There was shame and blame and failure all around,
I saw tears and fears and the death of a child,
Locked within the attic of my mind.

Yet I live today, as you can plainly see
I escaped the attic of my mind.
Years have passed since I spent that night
Facing horrors in the attic of my mind.
I feel new emotions that I'd never known before,
Here's to pride and pleasure and the wonder of success
I have hope and courage, for I know that I can find Survival in the attic of my mind.

APSU Comp Services selling used computer terminals

Austin Peay State University Computer Services is selling a group of used Hazeltine and Digital Equipment Corporation computer terminals. Samples of the terminals will be on display in the University Book and Supply Store located in the basement of the Morgan University Center.

A group of Hazeltine terminals are offered for sale at a cost of $30 each. There are several different models with the majority being 1410's. Approximately three-fourths of these terminals are functional, while the others are defective with some of them having been cannibalized for spare parts. In addition, we have a small quantity of defective Digital Equipment Corporation VT-100 terminals for sale. The DEC terminals will be sold for $50 each if anyone wants them.

It is suggested that you not purchase a defective terminal unless you want to experiment with repairs yourself or pay a commercial repair facility to fix it. These terminals are being sold because the University has determined that the cost of maintaining them exceeds the cost of their value. You are cautioned that these terminals do not offer all the features of the newer terminals installed on campus. Some software may not function at all and some may function differently than it will on campus when run on these terminals. You should however, be able to run the editor in "line mode" to create and edit programs and run those programs without a lot of trouble.

Also be advised that there are harmful voltages present inside the terminals as in the case with a television set. Only qualified repair technicians should attempt to make repairs.

In order to use the terminal with the University VAX computer via the telephone, you will need a modem and cable. These are not supplied with the terminal and are not available from the University. Modems and cables are available from local vendors and mail order houses at costs ranging from $75 on up depending on the speed at which you wish to communicate. In addition to the hardware, you must also have an account on the VAX system and must have a dialup access authorized. Accounts are issued to students enrolled in classes which require the use of the computer as part of the course. Dialup access is authorized upon request to students who have valid accounts for classes at the 300 level or above.

Terminals have been removed from service within the University and are being sold at salvage value to assist students taking courses utilizing the computer and who wish to program from home but cannot afford the high price of a new terminal. Students should insure they know how to use the computer terminal prior to purchasing one. Computer Services staff will assist you in selecting the best terminal possible but will be unable to provide support with installation and operation.
