Events planned for Women's History Month

BY ALICIA MOOREHEAD
editor-in-chief

Drs. Susan Calovini, director of the Women's Studies Program, and Women's History Month "is a time for re-examining and celebrating the wide range of women's contributions and experiences that frequently are overlooked in American history," Calovini said.

Austin Peay has planned several events throughout the rest of March.

Library Display

Woodward Library also will feature a display on courageous and interesting women, including some from the Clarksville area. The display will be organized by Sharon Johnson.

African-American Women Writers Panel

Wednesday, March 5 at 4 p.m. in the Harambee Room of the African American Cultural Center. All of the writers are from Tennessee and are associated with Winston-Davis Publishers. The authors will discuss their books and sign copies. A reception will follow the event, which is sponsored by the Cultural Center and Women's Studies.

Forché reading

On Thursday, March 20, there will be a reading and a lecture titled "Women of Courage" by Carolyn Forché, the occupant of the Acuff Chair of Excellence in the Creative Arts. The reading and lecture will be held in the Executive Dining Room of Harrell Cafeteria from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

According to Calovini, Forché will pay tribute to women authors who have experienced conditions of extremity or oppression and paid witness to it in their writing. "Combining stories of these remarkable women with impassioned readings from their work, Forché will commemorate the courage and artistry of these international writers," Calovini said.

Copies of Forché's books, including "Against Forgetting: Twentieth Century Poetry of Witness," will be available for sale and signing following the talk. The event is sponsored by the Center for Creative Arts, International Education Program and the Women's Studies Program.

Women's concert

Also planned in observance of Women's History Month is a concert of women's music featuring the Dickson County High School Women's Ensemble under the direction of Cindy Freeman. The concert will be held on Saturday, March 22, at 7 p.m. in the concert theater of the Dickson County Community Building. The concert will be other guest artists performing music by women composers, and the event is organized by Dr. Ann Silverberg, an assistant professor of music.

Book discussion

On Tuesday, March 25, Sharon Johnson, head of acquisition/predications in Woodward Library, will lead a discussion of "Killing Rage: Ending Racism," a book written by the African American feminist writer and Hopkinsville area native, Bell Hooks. The discussion will take place in Library Study Room five and six and will be held from 11:45 a.m. to 12:45 p.m. as part of the "Book-a-Palooza" book-a-hug series sponsored by Women's Studies. Selections from the book will be available at the Reserve Desk in the library prior to the event.

Tax hike could result in budget cuts

By CARINDA BASSO
assistant news editor

Austin Peay is facing a possible budget decrease of over $1 million for the 1997-98 school year.

This is a result of the Tennessee State Legislature seriously looking at a tax increase. It is expected to make its final decision at the end of the month.

If the tax hikes are passed, the Tennessee

Board of Regents (TBR) schools will be asked to formulate a budget reduction.

If a state tax increase, people stop spending so much money for a period of time after the hike. Since people decrease their spending, the amount of money coming into the state decreases.

The Tennessee Board of Regents system receives a majority of its funding from the state. Since the amount of funds coming into the state will decrease, so will the amount of funding the TBR and Austin Peay receive.

No decisions have been made concerning cuts specifically at Austin Peay.

Currently, the Budget Committee is examining what the university must have in its upcoming budget, including faculty promotions.

APSU administration has been making presentations to the president's Cabinet regarding the budget planning process since February.

Meetings will continue throughout the month, and a final budget will be presented.

The first draft of the budget will be presented during the week of March 24-28 from 3-5 p.m. in the Cumberland Room, located on the third floor of the University Center.

The final draft of the budget will be presented during the week of April 7-11. A specific date will be released at a later date.

Development Center offers activities, opportunities

By VENICELLO WILLIAMS
staff writer

If you want to ask any student what the Student Development Center does, they would tell you a variety of things.

The Student Development Center was created last June when the Office of Lifeskills and Counseling/Tutoring Services combined.

"Since the merger, the center has been well received by the faculty, staff and students," said Diane Berry, director of the Student Development Center. "We are the link between some student organizations and the university."

The Student Development Center, through Lifeshores programs, sponsors various activities dealing with alcohol awareness, health, wellness and fitness and events such as Condom and Abstinence week. Safe Break week is underway now. These programs encourage students to adopt healthy attitudes and low risk options.

The center offers workshops such as anxiety and depression screens, stress and time management, test anxiety and procrastination.

"We are refocusing our workshops," said Berry. "We have redone many of our programs to help the students."

Another aspect of the center is counseling and testing. Berry says the center offers short term counseling. "We provide counseling services to address academic and personal development," said Berry.

The center also offers a variety of academic tests including the graduate record exam, the ACT and more.

The office helps with a lot of career counseling for students who are not sure about career choices. The office is well staffed with counselors and graduate assistants, according to Berry. The office is currently looking for another counselor.

"The counselors and staff have been very helpful in assisting me with academic and career development," said Austin Peay junior Shannon West.

One change Berry says she regrets is not as much emphasis as there was in the past. One reason for this was to push the Student Development Center. "We wanted the students to be familiar with the center," said Berry.

Although Lifeshores has been put on the back burner, you will see Lifeshores advertising.

Berry says she thinks students are well aware of the center and there are many ways to get involved.

You can join the STEP Team, which is an advocacy group. These students sign a contract stating they will commit to healthy lifestyles. You must also sign up for the Leadership 3000 course. You can get involved with Blah, Blah, Blah, a theatre group, which combat college situations through acting.

The center is very beneficial to students. "We want the students to know that we are here for them," said Berry.

Berry encourages all students to come to the center. It is open Monday-Friday from 8 a.m.-4:30 p.m. and is located in Ellington 214.

Sigma Phi Epsilon share ideas at Mobile leadership conference

By CARINDA BASSO
assistant news editor

The Tennessee Eta chapter of Sigma Phi Epsilon attended the fraternity's annual Carson Leadership Academies in Mobile, Ala.

The conference helps chapter officers learn more about recruitment, programming and rush events. Approximately 40 chapters from Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi, Florida and Georgia attended the conference.

One of the main reasons for this conference is to meet members of other chapters and develop new ideas for the upcoming year.

"There's only certain things you can do over again, so get ideas from other chapters on what to do," said Eric Willies, president of Sigma Phi Epsilon.

"Guest lists for parties were very much emphasized at the conference," Willies said. "That is a concern that a lot of other chapters had." Sigma Phi Epsilon tries to follow risk management procedures as much as possible.

"Anything can go wrong at any time and we could be liable for it, such as under-age drinking," said Willies.

Funding for the event is generated through the lifetime membership fee that each person pays.

Some upcoming events for Sigma Phi Epsilon are a banquet and Founders Weekend for alumni, including a Family Day, on March 18, 19 and 20.

AP students attend honors conference

By HILLERY GRIFFIN
guest writer

Four Austin Peay students, along with their faculty sponsor from the Honors Capstone Seminar spent Valentine's weekend in Cookeville at the State Honors Conference.

Hosted by the Tennessee Tech Honors Program, the 1997 Conference gave students from honors programs across the state the opportunity to meet one another and to present papers or participate in panel discussions.

Diane Nieritz, Karen Burkhardt, two APSU students in attendance, conducted a panel discussing William F. Buckley's statement that the twentieth century has been the most mismanaged century in history.

They argued positively and negatively about the statement in regards to education in the United States. They addressed the different methods (lecture vs. edutainment) and materials (Shakespeare vs. The House on Mango Street) that are present now in comparison with those at the beginning of the century.

The theme of the conference, "Multiculturalism: Mind, Body, and Soul," lead to the "hot issue," which was teaching multiculturalism in the classroom. The idea for the presentation came from the theme of the Honors Capstone Course.

APSU student Hillery Griffin presented a paper on the Righteous Gentiles of the Holocaust. Prepared for an upper division Honors class, the paper discussed the actions of Rescuers who helped protect Jews, such as the Swedish ambassador to Hungary, Raoul Wallenberg, and those like the Dutch Jewish family, such as the Dutch ten Boom family.

Both groups of students received praise and commendations from other students and faculty attending the conference.

Students had the opportunity to hear other groups speak. They were treated to TTU's West African Drum and Dance Club and a presentation by a drama group from Tennessee State University. The presentation, called "The Men! Black Lives and Justice," views of the trials and justice facing African-American men.

Students had the opportunity to meet other students and compare notes on the different honors programs across the state. Austin Peay students were impressed by the fact that TTU provides the tors students with a lounge where they can relax, study, play on computers, socialize and have meetings. Austin Peay student Gina Dolman attended the conference, along with Dr. Vernon Warren, Dr. Allen Phy-Olson, and Wesley Jarrett, honors faculty members. They helped the students organize and prepare for their presentation.

All of the students attending the conference have expressed interest in attending the National Honors Conference in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, to be held during the month of March.

A job well done

Teams end season in style

By ALICIA MOOREHEAD
Editor-in-chief

Just before the OVC championship game began last Saturday, Dr. Rinelli told me to go ahead and write the headline "Austin Peay goes to NCAAs." I have been telling everyone that he joined us.

However, it could have been missed free throws as well as questionable uncalled fouls that made Austin Peay lose, or it could have been, as head coach Dave Loos put it, "the bounce of the ball."

I am very proud of our basketball teams, both the women's and the men's, for their seasons. I am proud of the men who walked off that court Saturday afternoon, and I am even more proud of Coach Adrian Seabaugh, Culby Pierce and Bubba Wells.

They are the ones who came up with the interview room after the game with their heads held high, congratulated Murray State for their win. Loos congratulated Murray first thing and Seabaugh nodded his head in agreement. Loos and the three seniors fielded questions from media with pride not only for their own team, but for Murray as well.

I wish I could say the same for Murray's coach and players.

Coach Mark Gottfried made only one reference to Austin Peay as being a good team and Vincent Rainei told the media that Bubba was complaining about some of

The media was there and we saw what was said and done. Rainei should remember that it was one of Murray's players who received a technical for running with the referee.

I like many other fans, have watched Austin Peay's team throughout the season. I hope they realize what an impact they have on the fans. The players do not know many of the fans who come to games after games right in front of three of them during the press conference on Saturday and am almost sure they had no clue who I was, or if they did know, they had no idea I felt the emotions that I did.

There are hundreds of fans out there just like me. We share millions of the emotions that the players do. I know that in my case, I wanted to win not only for Austin Peay, but for the players as well. Then, having lost hard all year and when they lost, the sadness I felt was for them. Austin Peay will live to see another OVC championship (hopefully), but that specific team will not.

As Loos put it, "They (the team) have taken Austin Peay on a tremendous ride." Indeed they have.

It was very hard for me, as sports editor, and two guys from Magic 91.7 to sit on press row during the tournament. We were trying to be the professionals we thought we were supposed to be, and by doing that I thought I was going to pass out. I was screaming under my breath, the radio guys were making exaggerated hand motions and my sports editor wanted to kill Murray's band, but I wouldn't let him. We all were experiencing the same emotions: nervousness, fear, excitement, hope and despair all rolled into one.

When the long, exhausting game was finally over, one of the guys from 91.7 looked like someone had just died, and I had to listen to my sports editor complain the entire way home.

I think all the fans who have followed the team were feeling those same feelings. We believe in the team, and the team took us on a ride. I just hope the players realize that we are very proud that you got Austin Peay where you did.

Over the course of the basketball season, I have been toying with several opinion pieces. I at first wanted to write about how rude our fans are. My room mate and I have gone to almost all of the home basketball games this season, and she has gotten into fights with our fans on at least half of those occasions.

To put it into one word, our fans were cocky. They booted and yelled expletives at every home game this season. My sports editor talked me out of writing an opinion however, because he says that everyone else's fans are just as bad.

I got a taste of that at the championship game last weekend. Before even finding a parking space, I was taunted by a Murray fan who couldn't have been more than 12. He was holding up a sign that said "Bubba Who?" I immediately replied "Bubba Dunk."

Also at that game, Murray's band was being very obnoxious. When we were leaving, a member of their band was dancing in front of me and saying he was going to dance like that in front of me.

If our fans, especially students, saw how Murray's were acting on Saturday, maybe it will make them think twice about their behavior at games next year. There have been rounds of "you suck" coming from our stands at almost every home game this year. Our fans have taunted those from other schools and our band held up posters of half naked women. At the Tennessee Tech game on Friday, I thought the two bands were going to fight before it was all over.

The one thing I want you to remember is that you, as students, represent Austin Peay. Please remember those who are visitors to our university, even if they are our rivals. It gives both the students and Austin Peay a bad name when you are rude.

I think all the fans who have followed the team were feeling those same feelings. We believe in the team, and the team took us on a ride. I just hope the players realize that we are very proud that you got Austin Peay where you did.

Change will never happen if we see no need for that change, and we see no need for change if we never question the values that we hold so dear.

Many people use religion as a crutch. Oh, they will pray about the problems that the world faces, but they don't feel the need to do anything.

They feel that God is in charge of the universe and that everything will work out in the end. That is nothing more than a lame cop-out. Guess what folks, if you're waiting for God to solve all of the problems in this world, you're wasting your time. God didn't make this mess, and he is waiting for us to clean it up. All of the prayer in the world is meaningless when you aren't willing to commit yourself to real action.

For others, talking about world problems causes them to throw up their hands and say, "It doesn't matter, one person can't possibly do anything to change the way things are anyway."

This is also a cop-out. Change has always come from the actions and beliefs of individuals, individuals like you and like me. Never underestimate the power of one. That one man or one woman who commits his or her life to changing the world very often has.

Racers win OVC championship

88-85.

Three points.

Austin Peay's Governors came up short in their second consecutive Ohio Valley Conference Tournament's championship on Saturday.

The Racers of Murray State (20-9) captured the OVC Tournament crown and the conference's automatic NCAA Tournament berth with the overtime victory over Austin Peay (17-14).

Like last year's championship game against Murray State, the contest came down to free throws. Unlike last year's game, however, it was Austin Peay who failed to convert its free throws down the stretch, hitting only 5 of 10 in the final five minutes.

In a crowd of 5,795 fans and a national television audience on ESPN, Murray raced out of the gates with a 3-pointer by Deteri Mayes and a jumper by Tournament Most Valuable Player Chad Townsend to give the Racers a quick 5-0 lead.

The Governors responded by going on a 16-6 run on the strength of two Jake Powers baskets to take a 16-11 lead halfway through the first half.

A pair of Bubba Wells free throws gave APSU its biggest lead of the game at 27-19 with 3:57 remaining in the first half.

The Racers were not finished yet, though. Mayes hit three free throws after being fouled by APSU's Adrian Sensabaugh, and Townsend would add the last five points of the half to give MSU a 31-30 advantage at the break.

Murray held Wells to just 10 first half points, thanks to constant double teaming and physical contact.

"They banged pretty hard in there," Wells said. "As a team, it got exhausted."

The second half was just as close. Reggie Crenshaw's three-point play minutes into the second half capped an APSU 6-0 run, giving APSU a 35-31 lead.

Murray State managed to come back once again to tie the contest at 46 at the 10:27 mark on a 3-pointer by Vincent Rainey.

From there neither squad had more than a three point advantage the rest of the way. APSU appeared poised to bring the banner back to Clarksville with 33 seconds to play in regulation, however.

Sensabaugh intercepted Murray's inbounds pass, and Colby Pierce was fouled by MTSU's Darren Dawson. Pierce's free throws gave APSU a 69-66 advantage.

After a Murray timeout, Mayes popped open behind the top of the key and drained the game-tying 3-pointer with 16 seconds left.

"I felt in my heart that if we could get Deteri open, he would make the shot," Murray coach Mark Gottfried said.

Austin Peay's men's and women's basketball teams garnered several postseason honors at the annual Ohio Valley Conference post-season awards banquet.

Senior Bubba Wells was named OVC Player of the Year, while APSU coach Deteri Loos was honored with his second OVC Coach of the Year award.

Wells is the nation's unofficial leading scorer, averaging 32.2 points and 6.8 rebounds per game after returning from surgery on his leg on Jan. 4. He is Austin Peay's all-time leading scorer and is the OVC's third all-time leading scorer with 2,267 points. He is a three-time member of the All-OVC first team and was the MVP of the 1996 OVC Tournament.

Run for border ends with walk down aisle

By LANE CRAWLEY

What would you bring back from a trip to Mexico? Maybe a bottle of mezcal, one of those cool sombreros (impossible to pack and tough to wear on the plane), or a foul case of the runs?

If your name is Douglas Vazquez, you bring both.

While in Cuernavaca, Mexico, with the Study Abroad program headed by Dr. Ramon Magrans, Douglas met Gloria Patricia Vazquez.

Participants in the program reside with Mexican host families for the duration of their stay and Douglas lived in the Vazquez home.

"Now, Magrans put me in the best house," Douglas remembers upon first laying eyes upon Gloria.

Gloria, who was looking to improve her English by studying abroad herself, decided to come to Clarksville to practice her skills.

"It was partly because of Magrans that I came here," Gloria said.

Little did she anticipate that Doug would eventually win her over and they would be married on Dec. 14, 1996.

As Mexican tradition dictates, Douglas had to ask Gloria's father for his daughter's hand in marriage.

"It was kind of intimidating," he describes it, as Senor Vazquez is the Mexican equivalent to the chief of the Tennessee Highway Patrol, and is required to carry a gun at all times.

They decided to get married because they were in love and they wanted to remain together in the United States.

Gloria likes living in Clarksville, but has had to adjust to a life in Tennessee and misses her relatives in Mexico.

Some months her family's phone bill is as much as 10,000 pesos, or about 1,300 U.S. dollars.

Although most cross-cultural couples have problems adjusting to the habits of their spouses, Douglas and Gloria have had only to deal with minimal changes in accommodations.

"In Mexico, because everything is so cheap, you hire a gardener, you hire a maid, you hire a cook; if there's something to do around my house, I do it myself," Douglas says.

Gloria's family is used to having a maid and wishes she didn't have to tend to so many chores.

Gloria is receiving driving lessons from her new husband, as few in Cuernavaca drive—except for the cabbies.

Gloria had never taken the wheel in her life before making Clarksville her new home. Douglas says she's coming right along.

Douglas says he wouldn't mind all returning to Mexico someday, as long as they don't live too close to Mexico City. "It's so contaminated," Douglas says.

Gloria is a freshman political science major and international studies minor at Austin Peay and hopes to return to Mexico someday to work at the United States embassy.

Peay students recording progress for national education program

Two Austin Peay mass communication students are assisting with a special video documentation project for the Center of Excellence for the Creative Arts.

Brent Meredith and Adam Luna were responsible for filming three local elementary teachers as they demonstrated how the teachers implemented teaching strategies learned in a workshop presented by the Center for the Creative Arts.

This documentary video is one of several tools that will be used to introduce this unique program to the Clarksville community.

The workshop featured in the video, "Bringing Literature to Life," by Lenore Blank Kerner, was presented during 1996-97, the Center's second season with

The students are working under the supervision of Yvonne Prather, assistant professor of mass communication.

These workshops are designed to help teachers discover the power of the arts for teaching and learning.

The Center for the Creative Arts and the Clarksville-Montgomery County School System is the only team from Tennessee to have been accepted into this prestigious program.
